* The total population of the Urban Sanitary Districts in this table will be found to differ slightly from that given in other parts of the Report, owing to the population of the extended District of Stalybridge (Div. VIII.) having been included here, although the Act by which it was extended did not come into operation until shortly after the day of the Census.

† In a few cases, persons described as "Married" were stated to be under 15 years of age. These have been classed with married persons aged "15 and under 20 years."

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appeared to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed; e.g., "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to "Schoolmaster"; a Member of Parliament or Peer engaged in any branch of commerce or industry has always been referred to this latter, not to "Peer, M.P."

The numbers returned under any heading include Labourers, Apprentices, and Assistants, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Messengers, Errand boys, Porters, or Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings. Civil, Military, and Naval Clerks, Law, Bank, Insurance, and Railway Clerks, and Government and Railway Porters, are, however, exceptions to this rule. Many young persons, being Apprentices or Assistants, have therefore been referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will sometimes be found under occupations commonly followed by men only.

Persons returned as retired from any business have not been referred to that business. Inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed that they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their usual occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster," alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appeared to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed; e.g., "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to "Schoolmaster"; a Member of Parliament or Peer engaged in any branch of commerce or industry has always been referred to this latter, not to "Peer, M.P."

The numbers returned under any heading include Labourers, Apprentices, and Assistants, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Messengers, Errand boys, Porters, or Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings. Civil, Military, and Naval Clerks, Law, Bank, Insurance, and Railway Clerks, and Government and Railway Porters, are, however, exceptions to this rule. Many young persons, being Apprentices or Assistants, have therefore been referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will sometimes be found under occupations commonly followed by men only.

Persons returned as retired from any business have not been referred to that business. Inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed that they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their usual occupations.

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appeared to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed: e.g., "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to "Schoolmaster"; a Member of Parliament or Peer engaged in any branch of commerce or industry has always been referred to this latter, not to "Peer, M.P."

The numbers returned under any heading include Labourers, Apprentices, and Assistants, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Messengers, Errand boys, Porters, or Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings. Civil, Military, and Naval Clerks, Law, Bank, Insurance, and Railway Clerks, and Government and Railway Porters, are, however, exceptions to this rule. Many young persons, being Apprentices or Assistants, have therefore been referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will sometimes be found under occupations commonly followed by men only.

Persons returned as retired from any business have not been referred to that business. Inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed that they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their usual occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster," alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

Note.—Registration Counties consist of groups of Registration Districts, which are generally co-extensive with the Poor Law Unions. Those Registration Districts which extend into two or more Counties are included in that Registration County in which the principal town of the District or the greater part of the population is located. The boundaries of Registration Counties, therefore, differ more or less from the boundaries of Counties. For such differences in Division II., see Vol. II., Table 11.

* For the number of Children at each Year of Age under 5, see Table 4.

† Two of these Males were stated to be 100 years of age, one 101, one 102, and two 103 years of age. Eight of these Females were stated to be 100 years of age, one 102, one 103, and one 105 years of age.

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appeared to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed: e.g., "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to "Schoolmaster"; a Member of Parliament or Peer engaged in any branch of commerce or industry has always been referred to this latter, not to "Peer, M.P."

The numbers returned under any heading include Labourers, Apprentices, and Assistants, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Messengers, Errand boys, Porters, or Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings. Civil, Military, and Naval Clerks, Law, Bank, Insurance, and Railway Clerks, and Government and Railway Porters, are, however, exceptions to this rule. Many young persons, being Apprentices or Assistants, have therefore been referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will sometimes be found under occupations commonly followed by men only.

Persons returned as retired from any business have not been referred to that business. Inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed that they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their usual occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster," alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

Note.—Registration Counties consist of groups of Registration Districts, which are generally co-extensive with the Poor Law Unions. Those Registration districts which extend into two or more Counties are included in that Registration County in which the principal town of the District or the greater part of the population is located. The boundaries of Registration Counties, therefore, differ more or less from the boundaries of Counties. For such differences in Division III., see Vol. II., Table II.

* For the number of Children at each Year of Age under 5, see Table 4.

† Four of these Females were stated to be 100, and one 101 years of age.

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appeared to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed: e.g., "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to "Schoolmaster"; a Member of Parliament or Peer engaged in any branch of commerce or industry has always been referred to this latter, not to "Peer, M.P."

The numbers returned under any heading include Labourers, Apprentices, and Assistants, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Messengers, Errand boys, Porters, or Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings. Civil, Military, and Naval Clerks, Law, Bank, Insurance, and have therefore been referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will sometimes be found under occupations commonly followed by men only.

Persons returned as retired from any business have not been referred to that business. Inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed that they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their usual occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster," alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

Note.—Registration Counties consist of groups of Registration Districts, which are generally co-extensive with the Poor Law Unions. Those Registration Districts which extend into two or more Counties, are included in that Registration County in which the principal town of the District, or the greater part of the population is located. The boundaries of Registration Counties, therefore, differ more or less from the boundaries of Counties. For such differences in Division IV., see Vol. II Table 11.

* For the Number of Children at each Year of Age under 5, see Table 4.

† Two of these Males were stated to be 100, two 101, and one 111 years of age. One of these Females was stated to be 103, and one 105 years of age.

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appeared to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed: e.g., "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to "Schoolmaster"; a Member of Parliament or Peer engaged in any branch of commerce or industry has always been referred to this latter, not to "Peer, M.P."

The numbers returned under any heading include Labourers, Apprentices, and Assistants, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Messengers, Brand boys, Porters, or Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings. Civil, Military, and Naval Clerks, Law, Bank, Insurance, and Railway Clerks, and Government and Railway Porters, are, however, exceptions to this rule. Many young persons, being Apprentices or Assistants, have therefore been referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will sometimes be found under occupations commonly followed by men only.

Persons returned as retired from any business have not been referred to that business. Inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed that they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their usual occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster," alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

Registration Counties consist of groups of Registration Districts, which are generally co-extensive with the Poor Law Unions. Those Registrations which extend into two or more Counties are included in that Registration County in which the principal town of the District or the greater part of the population is located. The boundaries of Registration Counties, therefore, differ more or less from the boundaries of Counties. For such differences in Division V., Table II.

* or the number of Children at each Year of Age under 5, see Table 4.

One of these Males was stated to be 100 and one 104 years of age. Two of these Females were stated to be 100, two 102, one 103, and one 104 years of age.

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appeared to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed: e.g., "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to "Schoolmaster"; a Member of Parliament or Peer engaged in any branch of commerce or industry has always been referred to this latter, not to "Peer, M.P."

The numbers returned under any heading include Labourers, Apprentices, and Assistants, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Messengers, Errand boys, Porters, or Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings. Civil, Military, and Naval Clerks, Law, Bank, Insurance, and Railway Clerks, and Government and Railway Porters, are, however, exceptions to this rule. Many young persons, being Apprentices or Assistants, have therefore been referred to occupations usually followed by adults. * Women also, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will sometimes be found under occupations commonly followed by men only.

Persons returned as retired from any business have not been referred to that business. Inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed that they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their usual occupations.

The numbers returned under any heading include Labourers, Apprentices, and Assistants, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Messengers, Errand boys, Porters, or Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings. Civil, Military, and Naval Clerks, Law, Bank, Insurance, and Railway Clerks, and Government and Railway Porters, are, however, exceptions to this rule. Many young persons, being Apprentices or Assistants, have therefore been referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will sometimes be found under occupations commonly followed by men only.

male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster," alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

Note.—Registration Counties consist of groups of Registration Districts, which are generally co-extensive with the Poor Law Unions. Those Registration Districts which extend into two or more Counties are included in that Registration County in which the principal town of the District or the greater population is located. The boundaries of Registration Counties, therefore, differ more or less from the boundaries of Counties. For such differences in Division Vol. II., Table II.

* For the number of Children at each Year of Age under 5, see Table 4.

† Two of these Males were stated to be 101 and one 102 years of age. Three of these Females were stated to be 100, and one 102 years of age.

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appeared to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed: e.g., "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to "Schoolmaster"; a Member of Parliament or Peer engaged in any branch of commerce or industry has always been referred to this latter, not to "Peer, M.P."

The numbers returned under any heading include Labourers, Apprentices, and Assistants, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Messengers, Errand boys, Porters, or Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings. Civil, Military, and Naval Clerks, Law, Bank, Insurance, and have therefore been referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will sometimes be found under occupations commonly followed by men only.

Persons returned as retired from any business have not been referred to that business. Inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed that they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their usual occupations.

Notes.—Registration Counties consist of groups of Registration Districts, which are generally co-extensive with the Poor Law Unions. Those Registration Districts which extend into two or more counties are included in that Registration County in which the principal town of the District or the greater part of the population is located. The boundaries of Registration Counties, therefore, differ more or less from the boundaries of Counties. For such differences in Division VIII., Table 11.
For the number of Children at each Year of Age under 5, see Table 4.
Each of these Males was stated to be 100 years of age. Two of these Females were stated to be 100 years of age, two 101, one 104, one 105, and one 106 years

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appeared to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed: e.g., "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to "Schoolmaster"; a Member of Parliament or Peer engaged in any branch of commerce or industry has always been referred to this latter, not to "Peer, M.P."

The numbers returned under any heading include Labourers, Apprentices, and Assistants, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Messengers, Errand boys, Porters, or Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings. Civil, Military, and Naval Clerks, Law, Bank, Insurance, and Railway Clerks, and Government and Railway Porters, are, however, exceptions to this rule. Many young persons, being Apprentices or Assistants, have therefore been referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will sometimes be found under occupations commonly followed by men only.

Persons returned as retired from any business have not been referred to that business. Inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed that they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their usual occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster," alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appeared to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed: any branch of commerce or industry has always been referred to this latter, not to "Peer, M.P."

The numbers returned under any heading include Labourers, Apprentices, and Assistants, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Messengers, Errand boys, Porters, or Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings. Civil, Military, and Naval Clerks, Law, Bank, Insurance, and Railway Clerks, and Government and Railway Porters, are, however, exceptions to this rule. Many young persons, being Apprentices or Assistants, have therefore been referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will sometimes be found under occupations commonly followed by men only.

Persons returned as retired from any business have not been referred to that business. Inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed that they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their usual occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster," alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

Notes.—Registration Counties consist of groups of Registration Districts, which are generally co-extensive with the Poor Law Unions. Those Registration Districts which extend into two or more counties, are included in that Registration County in which the principal town of the District, or the greater part of the population, is located. The boundaries of Registration Counties, therefore, differ more or less from the boundaries of Counties. For such differences in Division X., see Vol. II., Table 11.

* For the number of Children at each Year of Age under 5, see Table 4.

† Two of these Males were stated to be 100, two 101, three 102, and one 103 years of age. Seven of these Females were stated to be 100, two 102, and one 110 years of age.

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appeared to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed: e.g., "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to "Schoolmaster"; a Member of Parliament or Peer engaged in any branch of commerce or industry has always been referred to this latter, not to "Peer, M.P."

The numbers returned under any heading include Labourers, Apprentices, and Assistants, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Messengers, Errand boys, Porters, or Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings. Civil, Military, and Naval Clerks, Law, Bank, Insurance, and Railway Clerks, and Government and Railway Porters, are, however, exceptions to this rule. Many young persons, being Apprentices or Assistants, have therefore been referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will sometimes be found under occupations commonly followed by men only.

Persons returned as retired from any business have not been referred to that business. Invalids of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed that they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their usual occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster," alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

Note.—Registration Counties consist of groups of Registration Districts, which are generally co-extensive with the Poor Law Unions. Those Registration Districts which extend into two or more counties are included in that Registration County in which the principal town of the District or the greater part of the population is located. The boundaries of Registration Counties, therefore, differ more or less from the boundaries of counties. For such differences in Division X Vol. II., Table II.

For the number of Children at each Year of Age under 5, see Table 4.

Four of these Males were stated to be 100, three 101, and one 103 years of age. Seven of these Females were stated to be 100, one 101, three 102, two 103, three 104, and two 105 years of age.

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appeared to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed: e.g., "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to "Schoolmaster"; a Member of Parliament or Peer engaged in any branch of commerce or industry has always been referred to this latter, not to "Peer, M.P."

The numbers returned under any heading include Labourers, Apprentices, and Assistants, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Messengers, Errand boys, Porters, or Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings. Civil, Military, and Naval Clerks, Law, Bank, Insurance, and Railway Clerks, and Government and Railway Porters, are, however, exceptions to this rule. Many young persons, being Apprentices or Assistants, have therefore been referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows or orphans carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will sometimes be found under occupations commonly followed by men only.

Persons returned as retired from any business have not been referred to that business. Inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed that they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their usual occupations.

—ale designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster," alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

CENSUS OF 1881.

TO

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE
SIR CHARLES WENTWORTH DILKE, BART., M.P.,
PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD, &c.

Census Office, London,
August, 1883.

SIR,

At no period earlier than the commencement of the present century was it possible to form any trustworthy estimate as to the number of persons inhabiting this country; for all computations founded on domesday books, on subsidy rolls, on payments of poll or hearth tax, and the like, however ingenious they might be, involved of necessity so large an intermixture of guesswork as to deprive their results of any very substantial value.

Uncertainty of estimates
of population
century.

No proposal to ascertain the number of the population by systematic enumeration appears to have been made until the middle of the last century. On March 30th, 1753, Mr. Thomas Potter,* who sat as member for St. Germans in the House of Commons, brought in a Bill "for taking and registering an annual account of the total number of the people, and of the total number of marriages, births, and deaths; and also of the total number of the poor receiving alms from every parish and extra-parochial place in Great Britain." This Bill apparently had the support of the ministry of the day; for among those whose names appear on the back are Mr. George Greville, a Lord of the Treasury; Lord Barrington, a Lord of the Admiralty; and Mr. Charles Yorke, the Lord Advocate for Scotland.†

posal to have a census in 1753.

Accustomed as we are at the present time to such enumerations, the alarm with which the proposal was received, and the virulence of language with which it was combated, cannot but excite our surprise. "I did not believe," said its chief opponent‡ in the Commons, "that there was any set of men, or, indeed, any individual of the human species, so presumptuous and so abandoned as to make the proposal we have just heard. . . . I hold this project to be totally subversive of the last remains of English liberty. . . . The new Bill will direct the imposition of new taxes, and indeed the addition of a very few words will make it the most effectual engine of rapacity and oppression that was ever used against an injured people. . . . Moreover, an annual register of our people will acquaint our enemies abroad with our weakness." Another opponent, Mr. Matthew Ridley, stated that he knew by letters from the town he represented, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and from other parts, that "the people looked on the proposal as ominous, and feared lest some public misfortune or an epidemical distemper should follow the numbering." It was further urged that the scheme was costly and impracticable; that it was an imitation of French policy, borrowed from our natural enemies; and that it would not only be a basis for new taxation, but for a conscription. Nor was this latter fear probably without some justification. For Mr. George Greville, a Lord of the Treasury, in supporting the Bill, said that "it will be extremely useful at all times for many useful purposes; and in the case of a long war, it will be absolutely necessary. For the usual methods of raising recruits for our army would not then be sufficient. We should be obliged to have recourse to that of obliging each parish to furnish a certain number." The Bill, thus supported, passed through all its stages in the census in 1753 opposed and rejected.

* Mr. Potter was son of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and a barrister of the Middle Temple.

† Besides these three ministers, the following members backed the Bill: Lord Hillsborough, Lord Dupplin, Mr. Oswald.

‡ Viz., Mr. Thornton, member for the city of York.

Commons by large majorities, but was thrown out on the second reading in the House of Lords.

Census again proposed in 1800.

Nearly half a century passed away before the proposal was renewed; but when the new Bill was introduced, in November 1800, into the House of Commons, it had the advantage of a great change which had apparently occurred in public opinion on the subject of population. The old fear that the number of the people was falling off, and that an enumeration would betray the inability of the country to furnish a due supply of soldiers for the army, had given place to a new and opposite form of alarm, namely, that the people were increasing so rapidly as to outstrip the means of subsistence. Among the causes which may be supposed to have brought about this change of opinion, probably the most powerful was the great dearth which prevailed in the country at the time when the Bill was brought forward, much of the time of both Houses of Parliament being occupied in the year 1800 in discussions on "the present high price of provisions;" while a second cause that may fairly be assumed to have had some influence in the matter, was the attention excited by Malthus's great work, of which the first edition was published anonymously in 1798, and taught its readers that there were other aspects of the question of population than the military one.

First census taken 1801.

The Population Bill was brought in by Mr. Abbot, member for Helston, on November 20th, 1800, and passed through all its stages without opposition. The enumeration was made on March 10th in the following year, and has been repeated ever since, without omission, in the first year of each successive decennium.

The recent census was, therefore, the ninth enumeration of the inhabitants of this country.

Method used in the first four enumerations.

The first four enumerations, namely, those of 1801, 1811, 1821, and 1831, were made by the agency of the overseers of the poor; this being the only or the best machinery available at those dates for the purpose. These overseers collected information concerning the inhabitants of their respective parishes by personal inquiry, no schedules being supplied, as at present, to the householders themselves, and, on the basis of the information thus collected, framed answers to printed questions addressed to them concerning the numbers and occupations of the persons living in their parishes.

As no small proportion of the overseers must have been utterly unfitted for the work, there can be little doubt that the answers returned by them must often have been excessively imperfect and inaccurate. Moreover, as the collection of the requisite data was by no means to be completed by them, as now, in the course of a single day, but to be carried on day after day until completion, there must almost unavoidably have been not only many omissions but many double entries, the same individual being present, and therefore enumerated, on different days in different parishes.

Fortunately, however, in enumerations made on a very large scale and by a very large number of enumerators, the opposite inaccuracies of omission and of double entry will always balance each other pretty closely; and we may therefore assume with much confidence that, though the returns made by the overseers in the earlier censuses for individual parishes or other small areas may not improbably have often been extremely inaccurate, yet the total summing up of the results for the country as a whole was not far off the mark; and it is to these totals for the whole country, and not to those for the smaller areas, that after the lapse of so many years the main interest attaches.

The present system introduced in 1841.

In 1841, when the time for the fifth decennial census arrived, the enumeration was carried out by a new machinery. Four years previously the Registration Act had come into force; and, for the purposes of this Act, the whole country had been mapped out into a number of districts,* each with a superintendent registrar, and these districts again divided into sub-districts, each with a resident registrar, whose duty it was to keep account of the births and deaths in his sub-district; while, presiding over the whole system, was the Registrar-General with a staff of assistants in London. It was obvious that such an organisation as this, extending as it did throughout all parts of the country, was well adapted to furnish the framework of the machinery for the work of enumeration; and the business was therefore taken out of the hands of the parochial overseers and entrusted to this new body of local registrars.

* The districts coincided in all but a few exceptional cases with the poor law unions which had been constituted in 1834. Strictly speaking, therefore, the mapping out of the country into districts was made on account of the new Poor Law, not on account of the Registration Act as stated in the text.

Simultaneously with this change, other important alterations were introduced. The overseers, as already mentioned, had collected the requisite information as to the inhabitants of their parishes in any chance way that might seem best to them, and the process of collection had occupied them for an indefinite period. But now each individual householder was furnished with a schedule in which himself to enter the required particulars as to his household, and the particulars which he was called on to supply related to all persons sleeping or present in his house on a certain fixed night, an alteration which greatly diminished the chance of omission or of double entry. The schedules were distributed and collected by special enumerators, each registrar's sub-district being parcelled out by him for this purpose into a number of small sub-divisions or enumeration districts, each of such size that a single person could conveniently visit all the houses within its boundaries in the course of an ordinary day's work. The schedules, when returned by the householders, were copied by the enumerators into enumeration books, which, after examination and revision by the registrar, were submitted to the superintendent, and, having received his approval and countersign, were forwarded for final tabulation to certain commissioners appointed by the Act to carry out the census.

This new method of enumeration was found to answer so well that it has been continued on each subsequent occasion, the only change in the machinery of any importance being that the place of the commissioners specially named in the Census Act has been taken by the Registrar-General and members of his permanent staff, selected by him for the purpose.

The number of enumerators employed in 1881 in distributing, collecting, and copying the householders' schedules was 34,711. To these must be added 2,175 registrars and 630 superintendent registrars, making altogether an organised army of 37,516 persons engaged in the local collection of the necessary particulars. The central body, by whom the huge mass of details thus collected had to be sifted, abstracted, and tabulated, consisted of the Registrar-General and 55 members of the staff of the General Register Office and of 96 additional clerks.

Number of persons employed in the enumeration of 1881.

The enumerators received but scanty remuneration for services which were by no means light or simple; and it is out of the question to expect that an army of men, each of whom is expected to do the work of a fairly adequate clerk while he is paid at a far lower rate, can be raised for a temporary purpose, and that no difficulty shall occur with any of them. It is satisfactory, however, to be able to state that, disregarding a few exceptional cases, the enumerators performed their part, within the limits of their capacity, quite as well as could reasonably be expected. There were often, it is true, omissions and inaccuracies which had to be set right afterwards by supplementary inquiries; but such omissions and inaccuracies are the unavoidable incidents of every census, and we have no reason to believe that they were more frequent on the present than on preceding occasions. Indeed, although the difficulty of taking an account of the population necessarily becomes greater and greater at each succeeding decennial period, owing to the rapid growth of the people and the ever-increasing complexity of the areas of local administration, yet it is probable that, owing to the gradual dying out of the prejudices which hung about the earlier censuses, and to the increased experience of the local officials in the process of enumeration, each successive census has been more accurately taken than that which preceded it.

The point in which the enumeration books, as forwarded to the central office by the registrars after local revision, were found to be most deficient, and to show the most serious amount of inaccuracy, was the matter of boundaries. England and Wales have been parcelled out at various times in a multiplicity of ways for diverse purposes; and it has often happened that, when a new parcelling out for some special purpose has been in hand, those entrusted with it have laid out their new areas without any, or with insufficient, regard to pre-existing areas of administration. The boundaries of civil and of ecclesiastical parishes, of municipal and of parliamentary boroughs, of urban and rural sanitary districts, of registration counties and counties in the ordinary sense, not to mention numerous other sub-divisions of the country, overlap and intersect each other with such complexity, that the enumerators and the local registrars in a vast number of cases failed altogether to unravel their intricacy. Nor is this to be wondered at, seeing that often no official or authoritative statement of the exact boundary of an area was procurable. This was more especially, but by no means solely, the case with the ecclesiastical districts, the boundaries of which we found to be often very uncertain, and subject of dispute between neighbouring incumbents. In these and in all other similar cases, we laboriously investigated the evidence set before us, and finally adopted that conclusion which seemed most warrantable. These difficulties must, of necessity, have presented themselves to the compilers of former censuses, but the difficulties increase each census with the formation of new areas. One great addition to the labour on this occasion was caused by the institution in the preceding decade of sanitary districts. The rural sanitary districts, coinciding as they do generally either with entire registration areas or with the parts of such areas as remain after subtraction of any urban sanitary district within their limits, involved but little additional expenditure of time and labour; but the urban sanitary districts, nearly a thousand in number, with areas defined very frequently without any apparent regard to other administrative areas, added very materially to the toil of our work, and to the time required for its accomplishment.

We may illustrate this bewildering confusion of boundaries by a few examples taken almost at random.

The urban sanitary district of Mossley comprises parts of four registration sub-districts, parts of four parishes, parts of two unions, and parts of three counties, namely, Cheshire, Lancashire, and Yorkshire, but only parts of two registration counties, namely, Lancashire and Yorkshire.

The municipal city of York, which, together with the Ainsty, is included for parliamentary purposes in the North Riding, is included for registration purposes in the East Riding, and for all other purposes in the West Riding, while the parliamentary city of York, extending beyond the municipal limits, is partly in the North and partly in the East Riding.

The parliamentary borough of Stoke-upon-Trent consists of parts of six civil parishes and parts of four unions, and contains four municipal boroughs.

Halifax registration district contains one rural sanitary district and 19 entire urban sanitary districts with part of one other. The boundaries of 13 of these 19 districts do not correspond to any parish boundaries. For instance, the parish of Northowram is thus divided: one part constitutes the urban sanitary district of Northowram, a second part constitutes a portion of the urban sanitary district of Halifax, and a third part forms a portion of Queensbury urban sanitary district, the other portion of which is not only in another parish but in another registration district.

Bury registration district includes one rural sanitary district, and four entire urban sanitary districts with parts of three others. There are in this registration district 12 civil parishes or townships, and of these only two are not divided for registration purposes, the other 10 being split up so as to have portions in two, three, or more registration sub-districts. Moreover, each of six of the parishes contributes parts to two or more sanitary districts.

The parish of Ashton-under-Lyne, at the date of the census, contributed parts to no fewer than six urban sanitary districts, and to one rural sanitary district. It also comprised three registration sub-districts and part of a fourth.

The registration district of Crickhowel contains one rural sanitary district, one entire urban sanitary district and parts of three others. The remaining part of each of these three is not only in a different registration district, but in a different county.

These examples will suffice to show how complicated were the boundaries of the areas with which we had to deal, and it will be readily understood how enormously this complexity added to the difficulties and labour of our task, difficulties and labour which, under any circumstances, could not but be great, seeing how numerous were the areas of which account was necessarily to be taken.

Those areas were as follows:—

- 1 England and Wales.
- 1 England.
- 1 Wales.
- 1 North Wales.
- 1 South Wales.
- 52 Counties.
- 95 Parliamentary counties or divisions of counties.
- 198 Parliamentary boroughs,
- 243 Municipal boroughs.
- 752 Wards of municipal boroughs.
- 830 Hundreds.
- 715 Petty and special sessional divisions.
- 616 Lieutenancy sub-divisions.
- 7 Cinque Ports and ancient towns (parent ports).
- 23 Additional members of Cinque Ports and ancient towns.

- 14,926 Civil parishes.
- 34 Ecclesiastical provinces and dioceses.
- 136 Separate constituent parts of such dioceses.
- 6,958 Ecclesiastical parishes that are neither entire mother parishes nor conterminous with civil parishes.
- 9,107 Separate constituent parts of such ecclesiastical parishes.
- 11 Registration divisions.
- 57 Registration counties.
- 630 Registration districts.
- 2,175 Registration sub-districts.
- 966 Urban sanitary districts.
- 578 Rural sanitary districts.
- 184 Various metropolitan areas not included above.

Before proceeding to discuss the results of the recent enumeration, there is a question which it will be well to answer distinctly, so as to prevent any possible misapprehension. What is meant by the population of a given place or area? In different countries different answers would have to be given to this question. In some countries those persons only are considered to belong to the population of a place who habitually reside therein, that is to say, who constitute its fixed or permanent inhabitants. In countries where the number of regularly domiciled inhabitants determines many financial arrangements relating to the amount of payments to be made by and to a community, and also is the foundation on which numerous details of municipal and general administration are based, doubtless this definition of the term "population" is that which best answers the purpose. It involves, however, an elaborate arrangement by which, when an enumeration is made, strict account is taken in each area, not only of the strangers from without who may be temporarily present, but also of those habitual inhabitants who are temporarily absent from their homes. It presents, moreover, the inconvenience, that not only is it difficult to define what constitutes temporary absence or habitual residence, but that a considerable number of persons are without fixed domicile at all, while others have more than one place of residence, to any one of which they may be referred with equal propriety.

A second answer to the question, what is meant by the population of a place, is the signification attached to the term in this country. According to it, the population of a given place or area consists of all those persons who are actually present within its boundaries at a certain fixed moment, and that moment in the recent enumeration was 12 p.m., 3rd April, 1881. All persons who were actually present in a place at that moment, were they natives or foreigners, strangers or habitual residents, were they lodged in houses or ships, or sleeping under a hedge, were alike counted as units in its population, and, besides such persons, no one else was reckoned in. The only exception to the rule was in the case of those few persons who might chance to be passing through the place in railway or other vehicles, and who for manifest reasons could not be taken into account. Such persons, on arriving at their destination in the morning, were counted as belonging to the population of the place to which they then came.

In short, then, by the population of a place is meant in this country its actual and not its resident population. For the main purposes to which the census in this country is subservient, it is this actual population of which it is most important to take account. Births, marriages, and deaths are registered in the places where they actually occur, without regard to the question whether the persons concerned were residents or strangers, and must therefore, in order to get true rates, be compared with the actual rather than with the resident population. It may, however, be observed, that, seeing that the enumeration is taken both at an hour in the day and at a season of the year when persons are mostly in their own homes, in all probability actual and resident population are very nearly identical, so far as regards their total amounts. Some absentees, of course, there will be and some strangers, but the two will balance each other with sufficient accuracy for all practical uses. Should there be in any instance reason to suspect that this is not the case, that is to say, should there have been any unusual cause for temporary congestion or the contrary in a given locality at the date of the census, the fact is recorded in a foot-note.

Various meanings of the term "population"

I.—NUMBER OF THE POPULATION AND RATES OF INCREASE.*

1.—England and Wales.

Total population of England and Wales on April 3, 1881. The total number of persons returned as living in England and Wales on the night of the third of April 1881, was 25,974,439.

This was an increase of 3,262,173, or of 14·36 per cent., upon the numbers living at the previous census of 1871, and was almost exactly equivalent to the addition of another London with all its inhabitants to the population.

The rate of increase was higher than in any decennium since 1831–41, when it was 14·52. In the two succeeding decades (1841–51 and 1851–61) the rate fell, first to 12·65 and then to 11·93; but in 1861–71 the rate again rose to 13·19, and, as already noted, still further advanced to 14·36 in the decade ending in 1881. (See Appendix A, Table 2.)

Causes of the high rate of increase.

The rate of increase in the aggregate population of England and Wales is almost entirely determined by two factors, namely, the birth-rate and the death-rate; for, in comparison with these, emigration and immigration have but an insignificant effect. The rapid growth of the past decennium was due to the fact that the birth-rate was unusually high, while the death-rate was still more unusually low. That is to say, the additions were somewhat above the average, while the losses were far below it.

Intercensal Periods.	Mean Annual Birth-Rate.	Mean Annual Death-Rate.
1841–51 - - -	32·61 - - -	22·33
1851–61 - - -	34·15 - - -	22·25
1861–71 - - -	35·24 - - -	22·50
1871–81 - - -	35·35 - - -	21·27

The higher birth-rate in 1871–81, as compared with the preceding decade, implies the addition of 26,778 extra members to the community, while the lower death-rate implies the survival of 299,423 persons who with the previous rate of mortality would have died.

The natural increment.

The difference between the total number of births and the total number of deaths in the ten years, or “the natural increment of the people,” amounted to 3,426,480, or to an increase of 15·09 per cent. upon the population at the beginning of the period; and as the actual increase, as determined by enumeration, was 14·36 per cent., the combined effects of all other movements of the population, including emigration and immigration, resulted in a loss of no more than 0·73 per cent. in the whole period.

How closely the growth of the population is determined by the “natural increment,” and in what small degree comparatively it is affected by other causes, is seen in the following table, which gives the population and the rate of increase for three successive decennial periods, as they would have been if determined simply by the natural increment, and as they were found actually to be on enumeration:—

CENSUS YEARS.	POPULATION.		Excess of “Natural Increment” Population over “Enumerated” Population.	Increase* per cent. in previous Decade.		Excess of Natural Increment Rate over Enumeration Rate.	CENSUS YEARS.
	As determined by “Natural Increment” only.	As actually enumerated.		As determined by “Natural Increment” only.	As determined by Actual Enumeration.
1861	20,188,335	20,066,224	122,111	12·61	11·93	0·68	1861
1871	22,791,234	22,712,266	78,968	13·58	13·19	0·39	1871
1881	26,138,746	25,974,439	164,307	15·09	14·36	0·73	1881

* The rates of increase in this table refer to the intervals between the several censuses, without correction for the very slight inequalities of the periods.

* The tables relating to the Areas, Houses, and Population, male and female, of Counties, Parliamentary Divisions and Boroughs, Municipal Boroughs and Wards, Hundreds, Petty Sessional Divisions, Lieutenantcy Sub-divisions, Civil Parishes, Ecclesiastical Provinces, Dioceses and Parishes, will be found in Vol. I., which has an index at p. 555.

The tables relating to the Areas, Houses, and Population, male and female, of Registration Counties, Districts, and Sub-districts with their component parts, as also of Sanitary Districts, Public Institutions, &c., will be found in Vol. II., which has an index at p. 685.

For comparative tables of successive Censuses, see Appendix to this Report, Tables 6, 7, and 9.

The slight excess of the "natural increment" population apparent at each period is due to emigration, or rather to the difference between the number of emigrants and the number of immigrants, using these terms in a somewhat wide sense to embrace all additions and all losses other than by births and deaths.* Neither the number of emigrants nor the number of immigrants can be told with more than vaguely approximative accuracy. The difference between the two, however, as shown in the above table, amounted in the past decade to 164,307, the balance, as in each of the two preceding decennia, being on the side of the emigrants.

In the course of the last half century the population of England and Wales has increased 86·9 per cent. Supposing a similar rate of increase to be maintained, the population just enumerated would be doubled in the year 1936. Such a supposition, is, however, purely hypothetical, and we have scarcely more reason to assume that the rate of the last fifty years will be maintained for fifty-five years to come, than that a similar rate prevailed in former periods; and how far that was from being the case is shown by the fact that on such an hypothesis a single pair of persons living in the year A.D. 572 would have produced the whole of the present population of England and Wales.

Period in which the population doubles itself.

The chances of great miscalculation are lessened if we confine our calculation to what will be the case at the next Decennial Census. What will be the population in 1891? We have no means of knowing; all we can do is to say what it will be on certain different hypotheses, one perhaps as probable as another. Thus if we assume that the rate of growth in the decade preceding the Census of 1891 will be the same as it was in the decade preceding the Census of 1881, the population that will be enumerated in 1891 will be 29,705,155. But the rate of increase has been rising in each decade since 1861, though in diminishing proportion. If we suppose that the series will be continued regularly in the decade ending in 1891, the population at the date of the next census will be 29,988,993.

Probable population in 1891.

Again, seeing how little the population as actually enumerated differs usually from the population as determined by "natural increment," we may proceed on another plan. What has been the "natural increment" growth in the two years that have already elapsed since the Census of 1881? We learn from the Registrar-General's Reports that, in the two years 1881-82, it has been 2·942 per cent. If this rate be maintained, the population in 1891, as determined by natural increment, will be 30,026,290; and the actual population, on the supposition that the loss by emigration will have been in the same proportion as it was in the decade preceding 1881, will be 29,837,545. Lastly, as all these manners of guessing are practically on an equality, we might take the mean of their results, which would give a probable population of 29,843,898 at the Census in 1891. It actually was 29,001,018

2. Counties.

The increase of the population was by no means equably spread over the whole of the country. In 251 of the 630 districts, and in 985 of the 2,175 sub-districts, into which the country is divided for registration purposes, there was an actual falling off in the number of inhabitants. Even when larger aggregates, such as counties, are taken, there are some in which the population declined, while in the remainder the rates of increase were excessively unequal. In the following list those counties in which the population increased are arranged in the order of their rates of increase:—

Rates of increase or decrease in counties.

* "Emigrant" as used above includes: (1) Emigrants proper; (2) Persons gone abroad as travellers, &c.; (3) Persons who removed from England to other parts of the United Kingdom; (4) Any persons who died in the decade, but whose deaths were not registered at the date of the census; (5) Any excess of English or Welsh persons in army, navy, or merchant service, abroad, over similar persons at previous census. "Immigrant," of course, is used to include the opposites of these groups. The Table of Emigrants at page 105 includes most of Group 1, and also many of Group 2. As regards Group 5, there was an excess of 3,642 persons in 1881 as compared with 1871. Of the other groups no numerical account whatsoever can be given.

3. Urban and Rural Districts.

Urban and rural population.

The inhabitants of the country may be divided for practical purposes into an urban and a rural population. Such a division can, however, only be roughly approximative; in the first place, because the terms urban and rural themselves have no very precise meaning, and, secondly, because many places which must indisputably be reckoned as urban have no distinct boundaries.

The method of division usually adopted is to select those registration districts and sub-districts in which are situated the chief towns, and to consider the inhabitants of these as representing the urban population, while the inhabitants of all the other districts and sub-districts are considered to be of rural character.

The urban population, as thus determined, consists of the inhabitants of the chief towns and their immediate neighbourhood, while the rural population includes the inhabitants of the smaller towns as well as of the strictly country parishes.*

* These are the urban and rural populations of the Registrar-General's Reports.

Adopting this method of dividing the population, we have the following results:—

—	Area in Acres.	Years.	Population enumerated.	Increase in preceding Decennium.	Increase per cent. in preceding Decennium.
England and Wales	37,239,351	1851 1861 1871 1881	17,927,609 20,066,224 22,712,266 25,974,439	— 2,138,615 2,646,042 3,262,173	— 11·93 13·19 14·36
Town Population, i.e., inhabitants of the districts and sub-districts which include the chief towns.	3,171,565	1851 1861 1871 1881	9,155,964 10,933,234 12,910,647 15,445,296	— 1,777,270 1,977,413 2,534,649	— 19·41 18·09 19·63
Country Population, i.e., inhabitants of the remainder of England and Wales which comprises the smaller towns and the country parishes.	34,067,786	1851 1861 1871 1881	8,771,645 9,132,990 9,801,619 10,529,143	— 361,345 668,629 727,524	— 4·12 7·32 7·42

The urban population, therefore, using the term in the sense of the inhabitants of the chief towns only or their immediate neighbourhood, stood at the census of 1881, to the remaining or rural population, in the proportion of 147 to 100; the proportion in 1871 having been 132 to 100. This change in the proportions was not due to any decrease of growth in the rural population, which fully maintained the rate of increase attained in the previous decade, but to a considerable rise in the rate of growth of the urban population, this rate having mounted from 18·09 per cent. in the previous ten years to 19·63 in the decade just concluded.

The rural population, however, as determined by this method, includes the inhabitants of a very large number of places which, though not of sufficient magnitude to rank as “chief towns,” are yet of such a size that their inhabitants can scarcely be considered as living under rural conditions. It would be highly desirable to ascertain, at any rate approximately, what was the number of the urban population, if the term be extended so as to include this class of persons.

The recent division of the country into sanitary areas, some of which are styled Urban and the rest Rural Sanitary Districts, furnishes the best available basis for such a calculation.

At the time of the late census there were 966 urban sanitary districts, besides the 39 districts within the jurisdiction of the Metropolitan Board of Works (cf. Vol. II., Table 2.) The aggregate population of these 1,005 districts was 17,636,646, while the population of the remaining or rural sanitary districts amounted to only 8,337,793. The proportion, therefore, of persons living in places, which for one reason or another were considered to be of sufficient importance to exercise urban powers, to persons living elsewhere, was 212 to 100, or somewhat more than two to one.

Assuming these districts to represent the urban element and the remainder to represent the rural element in the population, the following would be an approximate account of the distribution of the people of England and Wales:—

URBAN SANITARY DISTRICTS, with Populations of—	Number of Districts.	Aggregate Population, 1881.	Per-centage of Population of England and Wales, 1881.
250,000 and upwards	6*	5,722,677	22·0

ENGLAND and WALES	—	25,974,439	100·0

* This includes the entire District of the Metropolitan Board of Works, which is here reckoned as a single urban sanitary district.

Urban and Rural Sanitary Districts.

The urban sanitary districts are of such recent creation, and were often constructed with so little reference to previously existing boundaries, that it is impossible in many cases to ascertain what was the precise population at the date of previous censuses, and thus to calculate the comparative growths of the urban and rural elements in the country. If, however, we assume that the rate of growth has been the same for the total aggregates as for those parts for which the necessary data are procurable, the following figures will represent the respective growths of the present* urban and rural populations:—

	Population,			Per-centage of Population of England and Wales.
	1861.	1871.	1881.	1861.	1871.	1881.
URBAN POPULATION - -	12,696,520	14,929,283	17,636,646	63·3	65·7	67·9
RURAL POPULATION - -	7,369,704	7,782,983	8,337,793	36·7	34·3	32·1
ENGLAND and WALES - -	20,066,224	22,712,266	25,974,439	100·0	100·0	100·0

The figures in this table show the increasing predominance of the urban as compared with the rural element. In 1861 there were 172 dwellers in towns to 100 dwellers in rural districts; but in 1871 the number had risen to 192, and in 1881 had reached 212.

4. Municipal and Parliamentary Boroughs.

boroughs.

The municipal boroughs (see Vol. I., Summary Table VI.) in England and Wales numbered 243 at the date of the census. Their aggregate population amounted to 8,412,121 persons; so that 32·4 per cent. of the total inhabitants of England and Wales were in enjoyment of such privileges and advantages as are derivable from municipal government. The population of Municipal boroughs had increased since 1871 by 27·3 per cent.; while the population living outside municipal boundaries had increased only by 9·0 per cent. This greater rate of increase in the municipal population was partly due to greater growth within the limits of the former boroughs, partly to the extension of their boundaries, and partly to the incorporation of 19 new boroughs in the course of the decennium.† The boroughs varied greatly in population, the smallest being Hedon in the East Riding of Yorkshire, with a population of 966, and the largest being Liverpool, with a population of 552,508.

boroughs.

There are 198 Parliamentary boroughs (see Vol. I., Summary Table V.) in England and Wales, neither their number nor their boundaries having been changed in the past ten years. It may be interesting to show here in one view the growth of these boroughs as an aggregate during the past 30 years:—

* Between 1861 and 1871 there were considerable changes of electoral areas which affected the figures for that period.

* It must be remembered that many of the districts, which are at present urban, would not have been sufficiently populous to rank as urban in 1871, and still less in 1861. The urban population for 1861 and 1871, as given in the table, is therefore overstated.

5. London and the other Great Towns.

The population of the 20 great English towns, included in the weekly return of the Registrar General at the date of the recent census,* amounted to 7,580,319, showing an increase of 16·9 per cent. upon the numbers enumerated in 1871. The 20 gre towns.

The rate of increase varied very widely in the different towns, but in one only was there no increase at all. This exception was Manchester, where the population was found to have slightly fallen, in consequence, probably, of the conversion of dwelling-houses into warehouses and offices. With this, however, must be taken into consideration the fact that the closely adjoining town of Salford showed an increase of no less than 41·2 per cent. Taking the two continuous towns together, there was an increase of 8·8 per cent.

* The municipal boundaries of Brighton, Nottingham, and Bradford were extended during the decade 1871-81, but all the rates of increase given in the above table relate to the populations of the extended areas.

The increase of the 19 provincial towns in the above list was 16·5 per cent. during the last decade, while that of London was 17·3 per cent. In the previous decennium (1861-71) the respective rates had been 16·1 for London, and 17·2 for the provincial towns. Thus London has increased in a somewhat higher ratio, and the 19 provincial towns in a somewhat lower ratio, than was the case in the preceding decennium.

The population of London was 3,816,483, and by itself somewhat exceeded the aggregate population of the 19 great provincial towns, which amounted to 3,763,836.

No fewer than 562,223 persons were added to the inhabitants of the metropolis in the course of the decade, a number exceeding the entire population of the largest of the provincial towns.

The population of London has almost exactly doubled itself in the course of 41 years, whereas the population of the rest of England and Wales has taken 57 years to multiply in an equal degree. The metropolis has thus been gaining in its proportions as compared with the country at large; and, whereas at the beginning of the century out of nine inhabitants of England and Wales one lived in London, the proportion has now risen to one out of seven.*

The increase of population in the last, as also in the preceding, decade was entirely peripheral. In the centre of London is a compact area, consisting of ten registration districts, in which, owing to the substitution of business premises for dwelling-houses, the resident population has for a long period been undergoing diminution. The inhabitants of this Central Area decreased by 7·8 per cent. in the course of the past ten years, having also diminished by 5·8 per cent. in the preceding decade.

* The number of "inhabited houses" in this Central Area has diminished by 6,655 in the last 10 years, while the number of "uninhabited houses," that is, of houses not occupied at night, has increased by 3,055. In other words, 6,655 houses previously used as dwellings have been replaced by 3,055 houses, not used for any but business purposes.

Round this Central Area, and constituting the rest of Inner London, is a circle of districts, all of which have undergone more or less rapid increase, the growth, speaking generally, being greater the further the district is from the centre. The population in this circle increased 27·7 per cent. in the past ten years, and 28·4 per cent. in the preceding decade.

* Woolwich District forms an exception to the otherwise general rule, that those districts which increased in the past decade also increased in the preceding decade.

Nor does this represent the entire growth of the metropolis. For outside this circle of districts is still further an outer ring, not included within the limits of Inner London, but only separated from it by an arbitrary line, in which the growth has been even more rapid; its population having increased no less than 50·5 per cent. in the past decennium, and 50·8 in the preceding one.

* More precisely, the proportions were 1 : 9·3 in 1801, and 1 : 6·8 in 1881.

The growth of Greater London, that is of Inner London together with this outer ring, amounted to 22·7 per cent in the past decade, and to 47·9 per cent. in the past twenty years.

The following Table will serve to give a summary view of the changes of population described above as having occurred in the several constituent parts of Greater London :—

II.—DENSITY OF THE POPULATION AND HABITATIONS.*

1. Density and Proximity.

The density of the population may be expressed equally well in several ways. We may either give the average number of persons to a square mile or other convenient unit of space, or the amount of space available on an average for each person, or, lastly, we may state the distance which would separate each individual from his next neighbour on any side, if the whole population were spread uniformly over the surface of the country.

expressing
density.

At the date of the census there were, on an average, 446 occupants to a square mile; each person, on an average, had 1·43 acres, and if the population had been uniformly distributed, the distance between any two neighbouring individuals would have been 90 yards.

According to the most recent returns to which we have access, there are but two European States in which the density of the population is so great as this. These countries are Saxony and Belgium, in which in 1880 there were 514 and 485 inhabitants respectively to the square mile.

The gradual increase of density of population in this country, at each successive census, is shown in the following table :—

increase of density.

Date of Census.	Persons per Square Mile.	Acres per Person.	Proximity in Yards.
1801	153	4·19	153
1811	175	3·66	143
1821	206	3·10	132
1831	239	2·68	122
1841	274	2·34	114
1851	308	2·08	108
1861	345	1·86	102
1871	390	1·64	96
1881	446	1·43	90

The density of population varied, of course, enormously in different parts of England and Wales (cf. Appendix A., Table 32.) Limiting ourselves to areas of the size of counties, and excluding the metropolitan counties, we find at one end of the scale Westmorland and five Welsh counties, in which mountainous parts there were from 54 to 102 persons to a square mile, and at the other end of the scale, Durham, Warwickshire, West Riding of Yorkshire, Staffordshire, and Lancashire, with from 732 to 1,706 persons to a square mile.

2. Habitations.

houses.

The total number of houses in England and Wales at the date of the census was 5,264,609. Of these, 46,414 were in process of building, 386,676 were built but uninhabited, while the remaining 4,831,519 were inhabited. Of the houses reckoned as uninhabited, very many, especially in towns, were occupied in the daytime, being used as offices or warehouses; but such occupation does not amount to habitation as here understood, those houses alone being reckoned as inhabited in which, to use the terms of the Census Act, some person or persons abode on the night of Sunday, the 3rd day of April.

Proportion

To each inhabited house there were, on an average, 5·38 inhabitants. In 1871 the proportion was 5·33; so that it would appear that the houses had not increased in the interval since 1871 in equal proportion with the population. The difference, however, was extremely small. The population increased 14·4 per cent., while the inhabited houses increased 13·4 per cent., and even this small difference was probably not attributable to any falling off in the amount of house accommodation, but to the fact that a larger proportion of the population was living in towns, where the individual houses are, as a rule, much larger than in rural villages and accommodate more persons.

Even in our great towns, notwithstanding the ever-increasing inflow of migrants from without, no material change occurred in the course of the decade in the proportion borne by houses to population, as will be seen in the following table, which gives the ratios in 1871 and 1881 for London and all municipal towns with more than 100,000 inhabitants :—

enumerated
on board vessels.

In addition to the persons enumerated as sleeping in houses, including under that title not only private dwellings, but hospitals, workhouses, prisons, barracks, and other public institutions, each of which was reckoned as a single dwelling, there were 77,868 persons living on the water, either in harbours, or on rivers, creeks, and canals (see Vol. II., Summary Table IV.). Of these 9,876 were on board Her Majesty's ships, and 58,514 were on merchant sea-going vessels. There remain 8,978 persons, of whom 6,225 were males and 2,753 were females, who formed the population of barges and boats on canals and rivers. It appears from a comparison of former returns, that this floating population on our canals and rivers has been progressively decreasing, as indeed might have been anticipated. In 1851, the number returned as living on boats and barges was 12,562; in 1861 it had fallen to 11,915; in 1871 it had still farther decreased to 10,976; and lastly, in 1881, was reduced to 8,978. This 8,978 represents only such bargemen, lightermen, and watermen as slept on board on the night of the census, and it may be noted that taking all persons following this occupation, whether they slept on board or on shore, there was no falling off in numbers in 1881 as compared with 1871, though the diminution had been considerable in each of the two preceding intercensal periods. The number of persons returned as thus occupied in 1851 was 35,120; in 1861 it fell to 31,428; in 1871 to 29,864; but in 1881 it remained practically unchanged, being 30,223.

Besides the inhabitants of houses and the population on the water there is always a considerable vagrant population, consisting of travellers in caravans, of shelterers in barns and sheds, and of homeless persons in the open air. Of these, 10,924 were enumerated in 1881; but such persons are, of course, likely to escape the enumerator, so that probably the number returned is considerably below the mark. As, however, this defect would apply in equal measure to the returns of this class of persons in former enumerations, we may use the figures without much hesitation for the purposes of comparison. In 1861 this vagrant class numbered 11,444 persons; in 1871 the number fell to 10,383; and in 1881, as we have seen, it was 10,924. This vagrant class, therefore, did not increase in the same ratio as the population (see Vol. II., Summary Table V.).

III. SEXES.*

Of the 25,974,439 persons enumerated, 12,639,902 were males and 13,334,537 were females. This gives an excess of 694,635 females over males, an excess which would, however, be reduced to 547,095 if the English and Welsh members of the army, navy, and merchant service abroad were included in the reckoning.

Proportion of male and females.

To each 100 males enumerated in England and Wales there were 105·5 females. A similar preponderance of females exists in almost all European countries, there being but two of them, namely, Greece and Bulgaria, in which the males are in the majority, and two, namely Belgium and Italy, in which the sexes almost exactly balance each other numerically.

This almost universal preponderance of females in the populations of Europe is the more curious, inasmuch as it is a law, to which, so far as we are aware, there is no exception, that the male births in a community invariably outnumber the female births. The physiological explanation of this fact is not yet ascertained with any certainty. But there are some reasons for believing that one at any rate of the causes that determine the sex of an infant is the relative ages of its father and mother, the offspring having a tendency to be of the same sex as its elder parent. As a general rule, the father is the elder parent, and thus it would follow that males would predominate among the offspring. In England and Wales the proportion of males to females among infants born in the years 1871 to 1880 was 103·8 of the former to 100 of the latter sex; and, though the ratio is not exactly the same in every country, yet in all, as before said, the rule holds good that more boys are born than girls. This original predominance of the male sex is, however, soon lost, and the relative proportions of the sexes inverted, as we shall have occasion presently to show at greater length, by the much higher death-rate of the males.

Preponderance of females.

The proportion of females to males has been slightly but steadily increasing in England and Wales since 1851, having been in the last four successive censuses 104·2, 105·3, 105·4, and 105·5.

Gradual increase of proportion of females.

The actual rate of increase in the last ten years was 14·30 per cent. for males, and 14·43 for females. But the “natural increment” of the males, that is to say, the number of male births minus the number of male deaths, was 1,704,435, or 15·4 per cent. of the male population in 1871, while the “natural increment” of the females was 1,722,045, or only 14·8 per cent. of the female population. From this it follows that the 164,307 persons who, as before (p. 7) pointed out, constituted the balance of emigrants over immigrants, consisted of 123,467 males and 40,840 females, and that the slight increase in the proportion of females in the enumerated population was entirely due to this excess of male emigrants. Had there been neither emigration nor immigration, the proportion of females to 100 males would have been 104·8, and not 105·5 as it was in fact.

* For interpretation of the terms Emigrant and Immigrant, see foot-note, p. 7.

The relative proportions of the sexes differed very considerably in the different counties, and in nine of them the males were actually more numerous than the females. Moreover, the differences presented by the counties in this matter were clearly not due to accidental or temporary conditions, but were brought about by some tolerably persistent cause; for the order in which the counties stand, when classed by the relative proportions of females in their populations, has been almost the same for several successive censuses. In the last five enumerations Cardiganshire has invariably stood at one end of the list, while at the other, or close to it, as invariably have come Glamorganshire, Monmouthshire, and Durham. This is not to be explained by any differences in the proportions of boy-births to girl-births; for, though such differences do in fact exist between different counties, yet they are too inconstant and too slight to have any very appreciable influence in the matter, and, moreover, these differences in the births do not tally with the differences in the population (see Appendix A., Table 17.). In Cardiganshire, for instance, the proportion of girls to boys in the births has been, on the whole, rather lower than in the country at large, and yet this is the county in which the population has always contained the highest proportion of females. The true explanation is doubtlessly to be found in the differences between counties in regard to occupations. Males and females congregate respectively in those parts that offer them the best chance of employment. It is obvious that the high proportion of males in Durham, Monmouthshire, Glamorganshire, Staffordshire, and Derbyshire is due to the mining industries of those counties. On the other hand, the high proportion of females in London with the adjoining parts of Surrey and Middlesex, as also in Sussex, is clearly due to the flocking in of young women to serve as domestic servants, dressmakers, shop assistants, &c.; while in Bedfordshire the still greater excess of the female sex is to be attributed to the strawplaiting and lacemaking carried on extensively in that county. But it must be confessed that such obvious explanations are not forthcoming in all cases. There is no obvious reason, for instance, why Cardiganshire should always, census after census, have a higher proportion of females than any other county. Still, it cannot be doubted that in this, and in other similar cases, close examination of the occupation tables for the two sexes, aided by local knowledge, would show that here as elsewhere the proportions of the two sexes are mainly determined by the amount of employment open to them respectively.

tions of the sexes at
age-periods.

The proportion of males to females at the time of birth is, as was mentioned before, 103·8 of the former to 100 of the latter. This numerical advantage is, however, soon lost by the males, owing to their much higher death-rate. It has vanished, as may be seen in the age-tables, by the end of the first year of life; and at each subsequent age-period, with one exception, the females in this country outnumber the males, and in increasing proportions.

The exceptional period in which the females are equalled or slightly outnumbered by the males is the 10 and under 15 years age-period. We have elsewhere expressed our belief that the number of girls living at this age is somewhat understated in our tables, owing to many girls who are under 15 representing themselves to be above that age in order to get more readily into domestic service. But this cannot be the full explanation of the matter; for a somewhat similar change in the relative proportions of the sexes at this age-period is noticeable in the census returns of other countries, for instance, in Germany, in France, in Italy, and in Greece, and must, therefore, be due to some influence or agency common to them all. The probable cause is the critical change that occurs about this period in the female organisation.

In the next age-period, 15 and under 20, the enumerated females are again slightly in excess of the enumerated males. This at first seems strange, inasmuch as this age-period is one in which common experience teaches that the risk to female life is comparatively high. The explanation is to be found in the absence of those young men from the enumeration, who are serving abroad in the army and navy. When these are taken into account, the males are still, as in the immediately preceding age-period, slightly the more numerous.

In every age-period after this the females are the more numerous, and the excess is greater than can be accounted for by the absence of men serving in the army and navy. In any comparison, however, of the relative proportion of the sexes at any one of these age-periods, it must be remembered that considerable uncertainty exists on account of the great amount of misstatement of age on the part of women; and that the general consequence of such misstatement is to increase the apparent proportion of females to males at the earlier periods, and to diminish the proportion at the later periods. This misstatement of age is, however, a matter of which we shall have to speak again (pp. 18-19).

IV.—AGES.*

So long as we were dealing with the mere numbers of houses and of persons, male and female, present at the date of the census in each of the multitudinous areas into which the country is divided, we were on sure ground. Here and there an individual travelling all night, and not going to any house in the morning, may possibly have escaped enumeration, and here and there a house lying close to a doubtful boundary line may possibly have been reckoned as belonging to the wrong area; but such omissions and inaccuracies must have been so rare that they may be utterly disregarded, and for all practical purposes the figures in the first two volumes, which relate simply to the numbers of houses and of inhabitants, may be accepted as strictly accurate. But no sooner do we pass to the question of ages, or of occupations, or of other particulars dealt with in the third volume, than we find ourselves on very uncertain ground, and must proceed with much care and circumspection.

As regards ages, there can be no doubt that the returns made by individuals are in a very considerable proportion of cases more or less inaccurate.

In the first place, very many persons, especially among the illiterate classes, do not know what their precise age may be. They keep their date of birth in mind for the earlier part of their life, up to 20 years or so, but after this they lose reckoning, and can only make an approximative statement. Such persons have a strong tendency to return their age as some exact multiple of 10; 30, 40, 50, 60, &c., as the case may be, though in reality they may be a year or two on one or the other side of that precise age. There is also a similar tendency, though in a far less degree, to return the unknown age as 35, 45, 55, or other uneven multiple of five. In consequence of this, when the ages of a considerable number of persons, as returned by themselves or their friends, are abstracted by single years, there is always found to be a marked excess for the years that terminate the decades, and a less marked, but distinctly recognisable, excess for the years that terminate the intervening quinquennia. This may be well seen in the First Annual Report of the Registrar-General, in which the deaths registered in England and Wales in the twelve months from July 1837 to June 1838 were abstracted by single years of age, and with the results shown in the Table on p. 17.

* The tables relating to Ages are in Vol. III., which has an index at p. 526. Ages are given, with distinction of sex, for Registration Counties, Districts, and Sub-Districts, as also for Sanitary Districts, in Tables 1-6 of each Divisional Part. Ages in combination with civil or conjugal condition are given for Registration Divisions, Counties, and Districts in Tables 7, 8, and 9 of each Divisional Part.

It will be noticed in this Table that at the ages of 10 and 20 there is very little, if any, apparent excess in the deaths as registered, but that after this period, during which alone the exact age is pretty certain to be retained in memory, there is a very great excess at each year that is a multiple of ten, and a small excess at most of the intervening multiples of five. When ages are abstracted, as in the census returns, by quinquennia instead of by single years, this tendency to return the age as a round number is of course less apparent. Still it exists, and the result of it must be that the figures for the successive quinquennia of life are alternately too high and too low, accordingly as they include or do not include a year of which the unit figure, or, to use a convenient French term, of which the millésime is 0.

In consequence of this tendency to round numbers, which has long been fully recognised, it is better to group the ages by decennial periods, and to arrange these so as to have the year which is an exact multiple of ten in the middle. The excess in such year and the deficiencies on either side of it will then counterbalance each other.

A second cause of erroneous statement as to age is the confusion made by many persons between the year of age in which they are living and the number of years they have completed; for instance, between "in the 21st year of life" and "21 years old."

The ages of children under five were abstracted at the Census Office by single years; and there can be no doubt that, owing to this confusion as to the proper mode of expression, the number of infants enumerated as under one year of age is very considerably below the mark, very many infants having been returned as one year old who really were only ten or nine, or even fewer, months of age. The returns of children in the second, third, fourth, and fifth years of life respectively are also probably far from correct; but here the amount of error will not be so great as in the first year, for, though a certain number in each case will have been pushed on a year beyond their proper place, yet this loss will have been more or less fully compensated by gain from the year below. The total number for the whole quinquennium will almost certainly be understated, because some children in the fifth year of life will have been returned as five years old.

A third cause of inaccuracy in the age-returns is the tendency of old persons, when uncertain as to their exact age, to exaggeration. In consequence of this tendency, very little trust should be put in the quinquennial or even the decennial totals after 85; and it is safer to make one single group in which all persons of 85 years and upwards shall be included. Not impossible, nor indeed improbably, some few of the 141 persons who were stated to have completed their 100th year of life at the date of the census may have been entitled to centenarian honours; but the results of such inquiries as those made by Mr. Thoms show that it is extremely rare for human life to be prolonged to this extent, and it can scarcely be doubted that comparatively few of the cases would bear strict investigation.

There remains yet another form of inaccuracy in the age-returns, which differs from those as yet mentioned in being of a wilful character. Many persons, and notably many women, desirous of being thought to be younger than they really are, return themselves as under 25 or as under 30 when their true age is even considerably beyond these limits.

On the other hand, we find reason to believe from careful examination of the age-tables that a not inconsiderable number of girls who are not yet fifteen return themselves as being of that or of more advanced age, probably with the view of getting more readily taken as servants. In consequence of this, the number of girls of the 10-15 years period of life, as given in our tables, is too low. Probably a similar overstatement of age on the part of many young women occurs in the next age-period, 15-20 years of age, and with a similar object. This age-period, however, receiving a certain number from below that do not rightly belong to it, and losing above a certain number that should rightly be retained, counterbalances its losses by its gains, and is therefore probably not very incorrect as regards the total assigned to it. But not so the next age-period, 20 and under 25 years of age. Young women under 20, as already explained, often state themselves to be over that age, while many others, who are 25 or more, state themselves to be under 25; so that this age-period receives at both ends without any counterbalancing loss, and thus the total of women returned as in this period of life comes to be very much too high.

That something of this kind occurs can be shown very easily and very conclusively. The young women in the 20 and under 25 years age-period who are alive at the date of any census are, of course, the survivors of the girls who were in the 10 and under 15 years age-period at the date of the preceding decennial census; and should therefore, owing to the deaths in the intervening ten years, be considerably fewer in number than the girls of whom they are the remainder. But, as a matter of fact, it is found, on examining the age-tables of successive censuses, that invariably the young women aged 20 and under 25 are considerably more numerous than were the girls aged 10 and under 15 ten years earlier.

Date of Census.	Girls enumerated as 10 and under 15 years of age at each Census.	Women enumerated as 20 and under 25 years of age 10 Years later.	Calculated Survivors of the Girls in Col. 2 after 10 Years on the Basis of the English Life Table.
1841	851,736	871,152	795,459
1851	949,362	969,283	886,634
1861	1,045,287	1,052,843	976,221
1871	1,203,469	1,215,872	1,123,951

It will be seen in this table that in 1841, to take a single example, there were 851,736 girls who returned their ages as between 10 and 15; but that in 1851 the survivors of these, who, according to the English life table, should have been 795,459, were, according to the returns, 871,152, or actually more numerous than the girls of whom they were the surviving remainder after a lapse of ten years! Death has apparently increased their number instead of diminishing it! Now, emigration and immigration cannot be supposed to affect the number of girls and women at these ages in any appreciable degree, and such slight effect as they may have would be to diminish rather than to increase the number of apparent survivors. There can, therefore, be no other explanation than that either the number of the girls was understated or that the number of young women was overstated; and, as we have already said, a close investigation of the figures has led us to the conclusion that both these explanations are true; but that the overstatement of the number of young women is very much greater than the understatement of the girls.

To what extent this falsification of the ages of girls and women prevails cannot be stated, and therefore no full correction can be made for it. Its effect is, however, somewhat reduced by making the age-periods under which the population is tabulated consist of decennia, rather than of quinquennia or other shorter periods. The age may then be not inconsiderably understated, and yet the person be kept within the group to which he or she properly belongs.

Such are the main causes that affect the accuracy of the age-returns, and that probably affect them very seriously. These causes, we should say, were fully recognised by our predecessors in former census reports. We have, however, thought it advisable to restate them at some length, lest incautious use should be made of the results of the enumeration. The age-figures, and especially those of the female sex, must be looked on as being at best simply approximative; and the shorter the age-period, the greater must be the margin allowed for misstatement.

It is convenient, however, for many purposes to have an estimate, even though no more than roughly approximative, of the number of persons living at each year of life. It has been shown already that the mode in which persons return their ages does not allow of this estimate being made by direct abstraction from the enumeration books. A more correct estimate can really be made by taking the numbers returned for longer periods of life, quinquennia for instance or still better decennia, and dividing these out to the individual years by interpolation. The series of figures thus obtained will, of course, present a much greater regularity than actually exists, but will be sufficiently close to the truth for all practical purposes, and at any rate will be much closer to the truth than any series founded on direct abstraction for single years of life. We have, therefore, constructed such a graduated table (Appendix A.,

The graduated age table.

Tables 10 and 11) by the method of differences. In this table the totals agree with the enumerated totals, raised to the middle of the year 1881, for the following life-periods :—

0 and under 5 years.			45 and under 55 years.
5	„	10	55	„	65
10	„	15	65	„	75
15	„	25	75	„	85
25	„	35	85	„	95
35	„	45	95 and upwards.

The totals for each age-period, excepting the first, have been apportioned to the several years within that period by interpolation. But the first age-period (0 and under 5 years) has been dealt with on another plan, the enumerated total for this period of life having been divided out to the several years within it in proportions determined by calculation from the registers of births and deaths ; and, inasmuch as the birth-rates and death-rates of children showed considerable fluctuations in the successive years 1876–1881, the series of figures for this first quinquennium of life is also necessarily very irregular. It has already been mentioned that, according to such estimate as we can form, the total for this first age-period is itself considerably understated. But notwithstanding this, we have retained the total in our graduated table without correction, because the same cause which leads to the understatement of the number of children living under five years of age will lead also to a similar understatement of the numbers dying at that period of life ; and consequently a correction of the living total would interfere with the calculation of death-rates, which is one of the main uses of the age-tables.

Taking the graduated table as our basis, we may estimate the numbers living at several important periods of life as follows :—

Children under school-age. The number of infants and young children who were not as yet of school-age at the date of the census, but all the survivors of whom will have to be taken into account by school managers when three years shall have elapsed from that date, was 2,192,871.

School-age. The children of school-age, that is 3 and under 13 years of age, numbered 6,218,305, and of these 3,101,095 were males, and 3,117,210 were females.

Minors and persons of full age. The number of young persons legally under age, that is who had not yet completed their twenty-first year, was 12,590,909. Of these 6,283,344 were males, and 6,307,565 were females.

The number of persons of legal age was 13,618,367. Of these 6,546,579 were males, and 7,071,788 were females.

Recruiting age. The number of males of recruiting ages, that is of from 19 to 25 years of age, was 1,407,348, being 15·9 per cent. more than the number of corresponding ages in 1871.

Reproductive age. The number of females of reproductive ages, which we may roughly consider as from 15 to 45 years, was 6,009,746 ; and of these, as may be estimated from another table (Vol. III., Summary Table 3), 2,953,078 had been married, and still had living husbands. The number of males of corresponding ages was 5,779,931.

Age-distribution of the population. The age-distribution of the population, that is to say, the proportion of persons living at each successive period of life to the total population, underwent very little alteration in the interval between 1871 and 1881 (cf. Appendix A., Table 15). Some slight changes, however, occurred ; and these may be summed up generally by saying that the proportion of persons under 25 years of age increased, while the proportion of persons over that age diminished, and, of course, to a corresponding extent. Here are the figures for three successive censuses :—

Changes in age-distribution at successive censuses.

PERSONS UNDER and OVER 25 YEARS of AGE per MILLION of POPULATION.

Date.	Under 25.	25 and upwards.
1861	543,807	456,193
1871	545,397	454,603
1881	552,237	447,763

This change was due to two main causes: firstly, to the fact that the birth-rate had been gradually increasing for many years; and, secondly, to the fact that the death-rate had been declining among persons under 25, while it had slightly increased in the aggregate of persons over that age. There had thus been an ever-increasing proportion of young members added to the community, and of this increasing addition a larger proportion survived. The following table gives the birth and death rates in three successive inter-censal periods:—

Decennial Period.	Mean Annual Birth-Rate* per 1,000 living.	Mean Annual Death-Rate per 1,000 living at the respective Ages.
		Under 25.	25 and upwards.
1851-60	34·1	22·00	22·37
1861-70	35·1	21·99	22·92
1871-80	35·3	19·78	23·09

* The birth-rates in this table relate to periods of ten years commencing in January, and, therefore, differ slightly from those shown on page 6, which are for the intercensal periods commencing in April. The former periods are used in this table because deaths in combination with age are only abstracted for complete years beginning with January.

The age-distribution differed much in the two sexes; and, as is shown in the following table, the proportion of young males to males of all ages was much higher than the proportion of young females to all females.

SEX.	Under 25.	25 and upwards.
Males - - -	560,969	439,031
Females - - -	542,573	457,427

To this difference between the sexes, which is one that repeats itself each census, three causes contribute. In the first place, the number of male births, that is, the number of young males added each year to the community, is always considerably higher than the number of female births; secondly, more males than females disappear by emigration, a loss which chiefly affects the middle periods of life; thirdly and lastly, female life is of longer duration than male life, so that there is an accumulation of females at the later ages.

Age-distribution differed also very considerably in different localities, and notably in towns as compared with rural districts. (See Vol. III., Summary Table 2.) In towns there is always an abnormal proportion of adults in the prime or working period of life, who are drawn from without by the higher wages; and this excess of persons of reproductive ages again, as a rule, entails an abnormal proportion of young children; so that in towns the proportion of aged persons to the total population comes to be much lower than elsewhere. There is also, as has been pointed out on an earlier page, a great difference between town and country in the proportionate numbers of males and females in their respective populations; and combining this difference as to sex-proportions with the difference as to age-distribution, we have the results given in the following table:—

NOTE.—London and the Urban Sanitary Districts are taken in this Table to represent the Urban Districts, and the remainder of England and Wales constitutes the Rural Districts.

The main points of contrast disclosed in this table between urban and rural population, are as follows. In the towns there is a great excess of adults between 20 and 45 years of age, and a deficiency in the proportion of persons of more advanced age. This excess of adults of reproductive ages causes a high birth-rate, and in consequence the proportion of children under five years of age is somewhat higher in the towns than in the country. That it is not even higher than the table shows it to be is to be attributed to two causes: firstly, a very large proportion of the excess of adults in the towns, though of reproductive ages, consists of unmarried shopmen and apprentices or of young women in domestic service; and, secondly, the mortality of young children is very much higher in towns than in the country. So great, indeed, is the difference in this respect, that though the proportion of children in the first age-period (0 and under 5 years) is, as we have seen, slightly higher in the towns, the position is reversed in the next age-period (5 and under 10 years), and still more decidedly in the next but one (10 and under 15 years), the proportion of young persons of these ages being much higher in the rural than in the urban population.

Passing from the columns headed "Persons" to the columns of "Males" and "Females," we find the following further contrasts:—The proportion of females to males is much higher in the towns than in the country, being in the former 108·3, and in the latter only 99·8 to 100. This difference is very decided in the third age-period, 10 and under 15 years of age, but becomes still more strongly marked in the next period, 15 and under 20 years of age, when the females in the towns are to the males as 109 to 100, whereas in the country they are only in the proportion of 85 to 100. This is due to the extensive migration of girls from the country to the towns to supply the demand for domestic servants. In the succeeding age-period, 20 and under 25 years, the disproportionate preponderance of females in the towns still continues, but is less strongly marked. The influx of young males has begun, and soon assumes such magnitude that in the next two periods, 25 and under 35 and 35 and under 45 years of age, the proportion of females to males is not much higher in the urban than in the rural communities. After this age the excessive proportion of females in towns again manifests itself, and the contrast between town and country in this respect continues henceforth to become more and more exaggerated with each successive age-period. Why this should be the case is not very apparent. It may be that aged women find life in towns more suited to their tastes, whereas old men prefer the quiet retirement of the country; and it may also be, and probably is, the case, that there are many more occupations open in towns to old women than to old men.

This question of age and sex distribution is not a matter of mere curiosity, but of much practical importance in vital statistics; for as the death-rates differ very greatly at different ages and in the two sexes, when an attempt is made to compare the healthiness of one locality with that of another locality, or the healthiness of one trade with that of another trade, it is not enough to take the general death-rates of the two as the basis of comparison, unless it has been first ascertained that the age and sex distribution in the two is the same, or sufficiently near for all practical purposes.

If we take the mean (1871-80) death-rates in England and Wales at each age-period as a standard, the death-rate in an urban population, as constituted above, would be 20·40 per 1,000, while the death-rate in the rural population would be 22·83. Such would be their respective death-rates on the hypothesis that the urban districts and the rural districts were equally healthy. We know, however, as a matter of fact, that urban death-rates, instead of being lower than rural death-rates, are much higher. The difference of healthiness, therefore, between the two is much greater than the difference between their death-rates.

V.—CONDITION AS TO MARRIAGE OR CIVIL CONDITION.*

According to the returns the number of husbands in the population was 4,376,898, while the number of wives was 4,437,962. The wives, therefore, outnumbered the husbands by 61,064. This excess represents those wives whose husbands were out of the country, with probably some intermixture of women who, though they returned themselves as wives, had no strict title to that designation.

Number of husbands and wives.

Of the enumerated wives 2,943,186 had not completed their 45th year, which, disregarding occasional exceptions, we may consider to be the limit of the reproductive period in women. The average annual number of legitimate births registered in the three years 1880, 1881, 1882, was 841,851, so that the average annual fertility of wives of reproductive ages was in the proportion of 286 births to 1,000 wives. The returns for 1871, when dealt with on the same method, give an annual fertility of 292 births to 1,000 wives, that is, give practically an identical result. We may therefore assume with much confidence that the proportion mentioned represents with close accuracy the annual fertility of wives in this country.

Fertility of wives.

The women of reproductive ages, 15 to 45 years, were divided in 1881 into unmarried, wives, and widows in the following proportions: unmarried, 2,865,253; wives, 2,943,186; widows, 181,178. The unmarried and the widows together numbered 3,046,431. Now the average annual number of illegitimate births registered in the three years 1880, 1881, 1882, was 42,916; and, if we assume that the illegitimate unions are on the average neither more nor less productive than the legitimate unions, the total number of unmarried women and widows under 45 years of age, who were living in illegitimate union, would be 150,056, or one woman in 20 of corresponding age and condition.

Illegitimate unions.

Probably, however, the above assumption is not correct. It is very likely that among the women who contract illegitimate unions there is a larger proportion of young women than among wives of reproductive ages; and, if this be the case, the average fertility of illegitimate would be higher than that of legitimate unions. This would to some extent reduce our estimate of 150,056.

The proportion of married persons to the adult population (15 and upwards) declined, though not very considerably, in the interval between the censuses of 1871 and 1881. In the case of the husbands the decline in the proportion was 0·98 per cent.; in the case of the wives it was 1·14 per cent. The decline in the proportions of the married was almost entirely confined to the earlier periods of life; among males affecting exclusively, and among females affecting mainly, those who were under 25 years of age. (See Appendix A., Table 23.)

Proportion married to adult population

The falling off in the proportion of married persons to the adult population was not due to any unusual mortality among this class, for had it been so there would have been an increase in the proportion of widowers and of widows; whereas, in fact, the contrary was the case, and the proportion of both showed a decline, though in the case of the widows the decline was very slight. (See Appendix A., Table 22.) The true explanation is furnished by the fall in the annual marriage-rate, which, having averaged 16·4 persons married to 1,000 living in the five years immediately preceding the census of 1871, fell to 15·3 in the quinquennium ending with 1880. It is true, that if we take the entire decades instead of their second quinquennia, the difference in the rates was not quite so great. But even then the difference was considerable, the rate for 1861–70 having been 16·6, while for 1871–80 it was 16·2.

* The tables relating to Conjugal Condition are in Vol. III., which has an index at p. 526. The Conjugal Condition is given for Registration Divisions, Counties, and Districts, and for the large Urban Sanitary Districts, in Tables 7, 8, and 9 of each Divisional Part.

and wives.

The average age (1871–80) of men when they marry or re-marry is 27·9 years, the average age of the women is 25·7 years. But the average age of all the enumerated husbands was 43·1, and that of all the enumerated wives was 40·7. The difference between the ages of the husband and wife had thus apparently increased from 2·2 to 2·4 years.

This seems strange; for the natural expectation would have been that the very opposite change would occur, and that the mean ages of husbands and wives would have become nearer to each other rather than have diverged more widely. For those marriages which would have been earliest dissolved by the death of one of the pair would, speaking generally, have been those in which one of the couple was much older than the other; so that the marriages with wide age-divergence would, on the whole, be more rapidly eliminated from the reckoning than the marriages between persons of more equal ages. The only explanation of the apparent inconsistency which we can suggest is the fact, of which, indeed, there is abundant other proof, that women are more given to understate their ages than are men; and that their propensity to do so increases as they become older. The great majority of women who marry are under 25 years of age at the time of marriage, and have no temptation at that period of life to understate their age. But as they become older this propensity develops itself.

in different
counties.

The relative proportions of married and unmarried persons in the population varied much in different parts. To examine into these variations in a satisfactory manner would require very extensive study of county peculiarities. A cursory examination, however, of the tables in which the proportions are given for each county shows that in mining parts, such as Durham, Monmouthshire, and Glamorganshire, to which large numbers of young men are attracted from without, the proportion of unmarried males is high; whereas, in the absence of any special occupation for unmarried females, the proportion of these is low. The proportion of unmarried females is also low, as a general rule, in purely agricultural counties, such as Cambridgeshire, Suffolk, Norfolk, or Lincolnshire, owing to the migration of young women into counties where there is a greater demand for domestic servants; such counties, for instance, as Sussex with its watering places, or the suburban parts of the counties of Middlesex and Surrey, which thus come to have a high ratio of unmarried amongst their female population. (See Appendix A., Tables 25 and 32.)

Difference between town and country districts as regards
condition.

There does not appear to be much difference between urban and rural populations as regards their conjugal or civil condition. The proportions of married and of unmarried, whether males or females, are pretty nearly the same in both. This, at least, is the case if we take the entire population, without distinction of age. But if, instead of so doing, we break up the populations into age-groups, and see how many married there are in proportion to the number living in each of such age-groups, we find some points of contrast between town and country. In the towns there is a higher proportion of married, both males and females, in the earlier age-periods, probably because wages are higher in the towns, and marriages are consequently contracted at an earlier time of life; whereas in the later age-periods the proportion of married is higher in the country than in the town, the differences at these later age-periods being chiefly, though not entirely, due to the excessive numbers of widowers and widows living in the town as compared with the country. Why the widowed should be in such high proportion in the towns is not very apparent. In part it is probably a necessary accompaniment of the earlier marriages; in part due to the considerably higher death-rate of the towns; and partly, perhaps, it may be attributable to the social life of towns being more congenial and better suited to widowers and widows than the retirement and solitude of the country. Be the explanation what it may, the following table shows that the proportion of widowed persons is higher in the town than in the country at every age-period:—

VI.—OCCUPATIONS.*

1. Method of Tabulation and its Difficulties.

The most laborious, the most costly, and, after all, perhaps the least satisfactory part of the Census, is that which is concerned with the occupations of the people. It is well that those who may purpose to make use of the tables relating to these occupations should be fully aware of the difficulties that beset such a tabulation, so that they may form a just estimate as to the degree of accuracy to be fairly expected in so complex a matter.

In the first place, the number of distinct manufactures and industries in such a country as this is enormous. Moreover, most of these manufactures and industries are sub-divided with great minuteness ; and each group of artizans whose operations are confined to one of these minute sub-divisions is known by a special designation, or not infrequently by several different designations in different localities. These designations in a large proportion of cases give no indication whatsoever as to the character of the business to those who are not possessed of some special acquaintance with technical terms. Here, for instance, are a hundred,—all names of occupations in current use, and yet such that in all probability an ordinary educated man would know at most but one or two of them, and often would not know a single one. Moreover, in those cases where

occupations.

The abstracting clerks could not, of course, be expected to know the meaning of such names as these, and consequently it was necessary to make a dictionary for their use, instructing them how to deal with each name that might occur. It was found that the dictionary in use for past censuses, and which had been constructed, we believe, chiefly on the basis of the directories of London and other large towns, had become obsolete. A great many terms that occurred in it had ceased any longer to be used, and, what was of more importance, several thousands that are now used had no place in it at all. Under these circumstances we determined to make a new dictionary of the names of occupations,—a work, it need hardly be said, of very great labour, especially as we could lay no claim to special knowledge in the matter of trades. With this view we sent out circulars to leading manufacturers, asking for information as to the designations used in their branches of industry, and the information thus collected we supplemented by searches through trade directories, and especially by a preliminary examination of the enumeration books from the chief industrial centres. By these means we eventually collected together between eleven and twelve thousand different occupations having each its name.*

Classification
tions.

The names thus collected by us we grouped into some 400 headings under which they were to be abstracted; and these headings were again grouped in sub-orders, orders, and classes, these larger groupings being taken with some modifications from the Census of 1871.

* The dictionary of occupations used in previous censuses contained almost exactly 7,000 names. The great change in the nomenclature of occupations that appears to have occurred since the former dictionary was compiled is partly due to new branches of industry having sprung up, and greater sub-division having been made; but probably also in great part to the fact that many of the names in current use are scarcely more than nick-names, which have but short lives, but which nevertheless it was necessary for our purposes to take into account as being actually used in the schedules.

We have mentioned that in some cases there are several names for one and the same occupation. This, of course, was of no importance, except that it added very slightly to the number of names of occupations with which we had to deal; but a much more serious matter was the fact that, again and again, one and the same name is used for totally different occupations. By Clothier is meant in some parts a Cloth-maker, whereas in other parts it means Clothes-dealer. By Bricksetter is in some parts meant a Bricklayer, whilst in most parts it means a man who performs certain operations in Brickmaking. By Bank Manager is ordinarily meant the manager of a money bank, but in mining parts it is also occasionally used for the man who superintends the operations at the pit's mouth. By Drummer may either be meant a Musician or a Blacksmith's hammerman; by Muffin-maker, either a man who makes the eatable that bears that name, or the man who makes what is known as a muffin in China manufacture. An Engineer may be either a maker or a driver of engines. A Collar maker may be a Seamstress or a Harness-maker. A Bookcase-maker may be a Cabinet-maker or a Bookbinder, and so on. In these instances the confusion is only between two occupations; but there are other cases, much more numerous and much more troublesome, in which a common name is used for some branch of perhaps half a dozen or even more different trades. There are Spinners, Weavers, Warpners, Winders, &c. in Cotton, Silk, Wool, and Flax Factories alike; and when an operative is returned simply under one of these or similar designations, without further specification, it is impossible to say to which of the several manufactures he should be assigned. Still more general names are such as Backer, Baller, Bender, Binder, Bleacher, Blocker, Blower, Bluer, Boxer, Brusher, Burnisher;—a list which by no means exhausts this one initial letter, and, if made complete, would be found to comprise some hundreds of similarly vague designations. Now an operative, not recognising the importance of greater precision, and perhaps in ignorance of the existence in other branches of industry of a designation identical with his own, very commonly returns himself by one of these general terms without further specification. In order, as far as possible, to prevent this, a special circular was sent to the persons engaged in local enumeration, calling their attention to the matter, and requesting them to see that in all cases the occupation should be described in a sufficiently specific manner. This, doubtless, had the effect of reducing the number of vague returns very considerably. Still, out of an army of thirty-five thousand enumerators, there could not but be a certain proportion of unintelligent or careless men, and the requisite precision of statement as to occupations was far from being universally observed. Thus, there are still in the tables of occupations such headings as "Miner (undefined)," "Weaver (undefined)," "Factory hand, textile (undefined)," "Artisan, Mechanic (undefined)," and the like. In estimating, therefore, the precise numbers of persons employed in any manufacture, the existence of these vague headings must not be lost sight of, and due allowance must be made for them. For instance, under Cotton Manufacture are given 487,777 persons employed; but there are also 21,145 returned as "Factory labourer (undefined)," 13,514 as "Factory hand, textile (undefined)," and 4,841 as "Weaver (undefined)"; and an unknown proportion of each of these was engaged in cotton manufacture. Still it will be seen that the number of these undefined Factory hands is but very small in proportion to the number known to be engaged in the Cotton Manufacture; and as, moreover, even of this small number only a part were Cotton hands, we may neglect, as practically unimportant, the slight understatement of the Cotton industry caused by the vague returns. So also in the case of Miners. There were, it is true, some two thousand men who were returned simply as Miners, without the kind of mineral being specified, but the men returned as miners of specified kinds were nearly half a million in number, so that the omission of any precise statement as to the 2,000 miners may be disregarded.

Names common several occupations.

Vague in stating specific occupations

Another very great difficulty which occurs in tabulating occupations is this. The number of headings cannot, of course, be unlimited; there clearly cannot be one for every distinct occupation. Now, group these occupations as one may, it is practically impossible to devise such headings that a given occupation shall invariably fall naturally under one special heading and under no other. An example will make this plainer. There is a heading "Cutler and Scissors Maker," and there is a heading "Bone, Horn, Ivory, Tortoiseshell, Worker." Now, to which is a man who returns himself as "Knife-scale Maker" to be assigned? By knife-scales are meant the pieces, usually of horn or ivory or bone, that form the sides of the handle. So, again, there is a heading "Tool Maker," and a heading "Wood Turner." To which of these is the man who makes wooden hafts for tools to be assigned? In all such cases as these, and they were extremely numerous, we were obliged to make arbitrary rules, and in the instances quoted we laid down the rule that the makers of handles and hafts for tools and cutlery were to be considered as tool makers and cutlers.

Cross divisions in classification

Rules as to persons with multiple occupations.

Then, again, came the question of how to deal with the numerous persons who return themselves as following more than one occupation. The general rules we laid down were, firstly, that a mechanical handicraft or constructive occupation should invariably be preferred to a mere shop-keeping occupation; secondly, that, if one of the diverse occupations seemed of more importance than the others, it should be selected; and, thirdly, that in default of such apparent difference the occupation first mentioned should be taken, on the ground that a person would be likely to mention his main business first. In some cases of multiple occupations we made special rules. For instance, a considerable number of clergymen are schoolmasters. How should "Clergyman, Schoolmaster," be dealt with? In this case we decided that Schoolmaster should be taken, on the ground that it was possible to ascertain pretty closely from other sources how many Clergymen there were, but there were not the same facilities in the case of Schoolmasters. So again, and on similar grounds, Members of Parliament engaged in any branch of commerce or industry were to be assigned to such branch, rather than to the heading "Legislator."

Rule as to persons to be included under any heading.

Another question to be settled was this: who should be considered as engaged in any stated occupation? For instance, was an apprentice to be so considered, or a person who returned himself as "retired" from any business, or as "out of employ," or the like? The rules we adopted were these: Apprentices, Journeymen, and Assistants were to be classed under the occupation to which they were apprenticed or in which they assisted; but Messengers, Errand Boys, Porters, and Watchmen (excepting Railway or Government) were not to be so classed, but to go to a special heading provided for them.* As regards persons "retired" from any business, we found ourselves in some doubt. In the Census of 1871 such persons had been considered as following the business from which they had really retired, and were abstracted accordingly. To depart from this former practice would, of course, interfere in some measure with the ready comparison of the returns for 1881 with those of 1871. But, on the other hand, it was known that a very inconsiderable proportion of persons who had retired from business made mention of their former occupation in their schedules, and that, consequently, if such persons were included, the return made by us under any occupation would be neither of persons actually so occupied, nor yet of these together with those who had retired from the trade, a large proportion of the latter being omitted. We found by careful examination of the enumeration books for an entire county, including a large town, that, had we included the "retired," as was done in 1871, the persons returned by us under any heading would on an average have been about 2 per cent. more than they are actually. On the whole, seeing that the difference was so small, we thought it best altogether to omit those who had retired from business; and we also excluded, as having almost certainly retired, all Patients in Lunatic Asylums and all Inmates of Workhouses over 60 years of age. Paupers under this age, Patients in General Hospitals, and Prisoners with stated occupations, were abstracted by their occupations, as being possibly only temporarily debarred from them; and the same rule was applied to persons "out of employ" from any stated handicraft.

It will thus be seen, without going into further details, that the tabulation of occupations required a very complex system of rules, and was not an operation that could be carried out by any chance clerk in an off-hand manner.

Few of us can in any way realize what is meant by a million, still less what is meant by twenty-six millions. But let any one try to realize to himself what is meant by sorting out twenty-six millions of persons according to their sexes, their ages, and their occupations, the very names of which are themselves a bewildering puzzle, and to sort these from enumeration books in which the handwriting is often very obscure. Let a person, we say, try to realize this, and he will, we think, admit that the task is not only one of gigantic dimensions, but one in which strict and unfailing accuracy is practically unattainable. We made every effort to secure as great accuracy as was possible under the circumstances, but we are bound to state that the margin that must be allowed for error is very considerable. Where the heading is something very definite, such as Baker, Butcher, Tailor, and the like, the abstracting clerk is not likely to have been much

* This rule as to apprentices will explain how it is that under occupations which are only carried on by adults, young lads or mere children will sometimes be found classified. But it also cannot be doubted that in some cases there has been a magnifying of office on the part of the lad or girl. When, for instance, we see boys under 15 returned as railway guards, or as authors or journalists, we cannot but think and hope that such is the explanation.

perplexed, and the figures given are doubtless fairly accurate, but in the case of complex businesses the figures must be regarded as only approximative.

We have thought it our duty to set forth as clearly as we could, and without any attempt at disguise, the difficulties that we met with, as also must have done our predecessors, in carrying out this part of the Census, and the consequent uncertainty that necessarily attaches to much of the tabulation. Having discharged ourselves of this duty, we shall now proceed to discuss the results.

The 400 and odd headings under which occupations in combination with ages were abstracted, have been arranged by us, as was previously mentioned, in sub-orders, orders, and classes, much after the same plan as that followed in 1871, though with some not inconsiderable modifications. The largest groups, or the classes, are six in number,—the Professional, the Domestic, the Commercial, the Agricultural, the Industrial, and the Unoccupied class,—in which latter we have included all children under five years of age. The names of these classes must not be interpreted too literally, nor must the lines of demarcation between them be supposed to be very definite. Still, for general purposes, and disregarding minute details, this division into classes is not without use. It will be found, for instance, that if counties or other areas be compared with each other in regard to the per-centage of their populations that is included in each of these six classes, a very tolerable idea may be got of their general character. We have accordingly added some columns in Appendix A., Table 32, showing these proportions for each county, as well as for the whole country.

The six classes.

The goodness, however, of a classification depends on the purpose to which the classification is to be applied; and, as different classifiers may have different aims in view, we have, in addition to the table which gives the classified arrangement for the whole country, and those which give it for each division, county, and large urban sanitary authority, also given an alphabetically arranged list of the headings, with the numbers of persons, males and females, belonging to them severally; so that every one may have facilities for grouping the occupations in such way as seems best to him (see Vol. III., Summary Table VI.).

In such remarks as we shall ourselves make on the results of the tabulation, we shall not attempt to deal with all the headings, nor shall we confine ourselves strictly to the classification in our tables; but we shall select such headings, and group them in such combinations, as may seem suitable.

From time to time we shall have occasion to compare the figures for 1881 with those for 1871; and in most of such cases it will be necessary to correct the returns for 1871, on account of persons "retired" from any business having been included in the returns for that Census, and not so included in the present Census. The correction which we shall apply can, of course, be only a rough one, and will consist in a deduction of two per cent. from the totals of 1871; this ratio having been found, as previously mentioned, to be approximately correct on examination of the enumeration books of a large county. For instance, in 1871, the returns gave 468,142 persons engaged in Cotton Manufacture; this, by a deduction of 2 per cent., becomes 458,779; and this latter number we shall consider to be the true return, for comparison with that of 1881, and shall speak of it as the "corrected" number. Other corrections will also have to be made by us on account of differences in the methods of tabulation adopted on the two occasions. The comparison can rarely be exact, and consequently too much stress must not be laid upon minute differences.

Comparison of figures 1881 with those for 1871.

2. Female as compared with Male Occupations.

The total number of males returned as engaged in some definite occupation was 7,783,646, being 71·5 per cent. of all the enumerated males aged five years and upwards. The total number of females similarly occupied was 3,403,918, or only 29·4 per cent. of all females aged five years and upwards. It must be remembered, however, that a very large number of wives and daughters assist their husbands or fathers in business, and also that the most important of all female occupations, and that which employs the largest number, is altogether omitted from the reckoning, namely, the rearing of children and the management of domestic life. To make the comparison at all a fair one, we should take into account the existence of the 4,437,962 wives;* and, were we to do so, the proportion of occupied women would be much the same as that of occupied men. Although, in by far the greatest

* Some of these wives will, of course, have had specified occupations of their own, and so in the proposed calculation would be counted twice. But, on the other hand, daughters or nieces assisting their fathers or uncles in business will be omitted, as also widows employed in domestic duties.

With some exceptions, the occupations in which more women than men were engaged in 1881 are the same occupations in which the female workers were the more numerous in 1871. But it will be seen hereafter that, in many industries in which both sexes are engaged, there has been a tendency to employ an increased proportion of female labour.

3. Professional Class.

PROFES-SIONAL
CLASS.

The Professional class, as given in the tables of occupations, numbered 647,075 persons, or 2·5 per cent. of the entire population at all ages. It is, however, a most heterogeneous class, including the highest State Dignitaries as well as the street mountebank. Moreover, many of the headings that are comprised in the class are such that the figures attached to them are but of little value. Such, for instance, are the headings "Artists," and "Literary and Scientific Persons;" in both of which cases the boundary is very vague that separates those who are really entitled to the designation from those who assume it undeservedly. Who can say how many of the 7,962 persons who were returned as Artist Painters were really such, and how many were house decorators, who had magnified their office? We shall, therefore, pass over a good many of the headings without comment.

Civil Service.

The Civil Service employed 50,245 persons, consisting of 25,568 officers and clerks, 21,180 office keepers, messengers, porters, and letter carriers, and 3,497 prison officers.

Of these 50,245 persons, 45,892 were males, and 4,353 were females. These figures are exclusive of dockyard and other artificers in Government establishments, who have been classed by the character of their craft, and therefore they are not comparable with the figures in the 1871 Census, when such artificers were included amongst civil servants.

The Police numbered 32,508, being about 17 per cent. in excess of the corrected Police. total in 1871. The increase in the police force was, therefore, proportionally rather greater than that of the population. One policeman sufficed on an average to maintain order among 799 of the population.

The Soldiers, as given in the Occupation Table, are those soldiers only who were present in England and Wales at the date of the Census, and numbered 87,168, in which total are included those persons who returned themselves as in the Yeomanry, Militia, and other similar services outside the Regular Army, and also 8,572 pensioners. By special returns, however, we are enabled to give separate tables (see Appendix A., Tables 37 and 40) showing the number and ages of the entire regular army at home and abroad. It comprised 186,428 persons, of whom 9,222 were commissioned officers, and 177,206 were non-commissioned officers and men. Of the entire body, 128,856 were of English or Welsh birth; 15,177 were Scotch; 39,471 were Irish; and the remaining 2,924 were of foreign or colonial birth. Army.

The total number of officers and men in the Royal Navy returned as being in this country at the date of the Census, excluding 8,910 pensioners, was 20,732. To these must be added 23,668 who were serving out of the country at that date, making a total of 44,400 officers and men in the service. This is exclusive of the Marines, of whom 7,720 were enumerated in this country, while 5,464 were serving out of the country, making together a total of 13,184 officers and men. Table 40 in the Appendix gives the ages of persons serving in the Navy and Marines, whether at home or abroad. The Royal Navy.

The Clergy of the Established Church numbered 21,663 in the table. But it must be remembered that many Clergymen are schoolmasters, and in such case they were classed as Teachers, not as Clergymen. Judging from the Clergy List, the real number of Clergymen at the time of the Census was not far short of 24,000. The Roman Catholic Priests numbered 2,089, against 1,620 in 1871. They had therefore increased by 29 per cent. The Ministers of other religious communities numbered 9,734, against 9,334 returned in 1871, an increase of 4 per cent. The Missionaries, Scripture Readers, and Itinerant Preachers, 4,625 in number, had increased by 42 per cent., and the Nuns and Sisters of Charity by more than 50 per cent. Taking the whole sub-order together the increase in the ten years was 14·7 per cent., or much the same as the increase of the population. Clerical Profession.

The Barristers and Solicitors together numbered 17,386, and were 12 per cent. more numerous than in 1871. The Law-students, 1,653 in number, had increased by 7 per cent.; and the Law-clerks, 24,602 in number, by 33 per cent. The whole legal profession, as thus constituted, included 43,641 persons, and had increased by 23 per cent. Legal Profession.

The Medical Men on the official register in 1881 numbered 22,936; but the number of Physicians, Surgeons, and General Practitioners returned as being in England and Wales at the date of the Census was only 15,116. The balance consisted of Medical Men registered in England, but practising abroad, and of some who had died, but whose names had not been removed from the register, owing to no notice of death having been received. The number of Medical Practitioners enumerated in 1871 was 14,692; so that the increase in this group was less than 3 per cent. The increase of the Dentists was much greater. Of these there were 3,583 enumerated in 1881, and only 2,466 in 1871, a difference of 45 per cent. It is not improbable that the small apparent increase among the Medical Practitioners, and the large apparent increase among the Dentists, may be due to many, who since the passing of the Dentists' Act in 1878 style themselves Dentists, having preferred in 1871 to return themselves as Medical Practitioners, or, at any rate, under some other designation than Dentists. If the Medical Practitioners and the Dentists be taken together, the total was 17,158 in 1871, and 18,699 in 1881; an increase of close upon 9 per cent. Besides the 18,699 Medical Men and Dentists, there were also 6,056 Medical Students and Assistants, 2,646 Mid- Medical Profession.

wives, and 37,147 persons, most of whom were nurses, in the Subordinate Medical Service. The whole medical profession as thus constituted consisted of 64,548 persons; without reckoning the Chemists and Druggists, who numbered 19,000, or the Surgical Instrument makers, who numbered 1,511.

The large number of sick nurses included in this sub-order caused the Medical Profession to consist of many more females than males.

teachers.

The number of persons employed in general education, that is, the Schoolmasters and Schoolmistresses of all grades (including Professors, Lecturers, Tutors, Governesses, and Pupil Teachers), was 168,920, to whom should be added a further 2,911 engaged in subordinate school services, making a total of 171,831. Of these, 72 per cent. were women.

In 1871 the corrected total under the corresponding headings was 124,597, of whom 32,243 were males, and 92,354 were females. Thus the Teachers in the course of the decade had increased by 38 per cent., the male teachers by 48 per cent., and the female teachers by 34 per cent.

The results of this enormous increase in the number of teachers in diffusing elementary education cannot be stated with certainty, because the only available test we have of the spread of education is the increase in the proportion of persons who are able to sign their names in the register when they come to marry; and only few of the children who were at school in 1871, and none of those who were at school in 1881, are yet of marrying ages. Still it is worth noting that the educational efforts of late years, which of course date back far beyond the 1871 Census, have had the effect of reducing the proportion of persons who could not sign their names from 40 per cent. in the decade ending with 1850 to 20 per cent. in the decade ending with 1880.

neers, &c.

The Civil Engineers numbered 7,124, and were 35 per cent. in excess of the number returned in 1871. But it is by no means certain to us that the persons who returned themselves as Civil Engineers in 1881 precisely corresponded to those who did so in 1871; so that, though there was doubtless a great increase, it must be left uncertain what was its exact extent. The Mining Engineers, now for the first time taken out as distinct from the Mine Service, numbered 2,291; and the Surveyors, a somewhat vaguely-used term, numbered 5,394.

Musicians,
&c.

Among artists and other persons who minister to our amusement, by far the most numerous were the Musicians. Of these, including all grades down to the street-organ player, 25,546 were enumerated, showing an increase of 38 per cent. upon the corrected total in 1871. The appliances of music were provided by 9,249 Musical Instrument Makers, who also had increased by 28 per cent. in the course of the decade, and by 1,440 Printers and Sellers of Musical Publications. Taking them all together, the persons who gain their livelihood by music amounted to 36,235, and had increased since 1871 by 37 per cent. This increase was the more remarkable, inasmuch as the growth of the same group had been 24 per cent. in the preceding intercensal period.

Actors, &c.

Nor was this great development confined to music. It extended to other forms of amusement. The Actors and Actresses, 4,565 in number, were 30 per cent. more numerous than in 1871; while the Persons engaged in Exhibitions or as Professionals in various games numbered 5,043, and had gone up more than 60 per cent. As regards the theatre, it is to be noted that whereas the Actors outnumbered the Actresses very considerably in 1871, the reverse was the case in 1881, there being 2,368 Actresses enumerated to 2,197 Actors.

graphers.

The Photographers, as might be anticipated, had increased greatly. In 1871 the actual number given in the return was 4,715, which had increased in 1881 to 6,661, or more than 40 per cent.

4. Domestic Class.

DOMESTIC
CLASS.

The Domestic Class, as now constituted, differs very widely from the same class as constituted in the Census of 1871. It included at that time not only Domestic and other Servants, to which it has been restricted in the present Census, but also Inn-keepers, Beersellers, and others whose business it is to provide board and lodging. These we have removed to the Industrial Class. We have also not taken Wives into account, inasmuch as to do so would in many cases involve reckoning the same woman twice over, once as Wife and again as Boarding-house Keeper or the like, when the wife has any specified occupation of her own. On the other hand, we have included in the class all persons engaged in Laundry-work, who in 1871 were classed with the Makers of Dress. The number of persons comprised in the class as now constituted was 1,803,810, and of these 86 per cent. were females.

The persons returned as Indoor Domestic Servants were no fewer than 1,286,668, and exceeded the next most numerous group, the Agricultural Labourers, by some 50 per cent. Out of every 22 persons in the population at all ages, one was an Indoor Domestic Servant. The proportion differed, of course, very largely in different parts. Speaking generally, it was lowest in mining and manufacturing parts, higher in agricultural districts, and highest in towns, especially in such towns as are the habitual resorts of the wealthier classes. Thus in London the proportion of Indoor Domestic Servants to the population was 1 to 15, in Brighton 1 to 11, and in Bath 1 to 9; in the Eastern Division, comprising the agricultural counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, and Essex, it was 1 to 21; and in the South-western Division, also mainly agricultural, 1 to 18; whereas in Staffordshire it was 1 to 28, in Lancashire 1 to 30, and in Durham 1 to 31.

vants.

This occupation is practically monopolised by the female sex, who outnumbered the 56,262 males in the proportion of 22 to 1. Of females above 5 years of age, one in nine was an indoor servant. The occupation contrasts with most others in the age-distribution of those who follow it. Not far short of half of them were under 20 years of age; and of girls between 15 and 20 years of age no less than one in three was a domestic indoor servant. Such, at least, was the case according to the returns; but, as we have stated elsewhere, there is reason to believe that a considerable number of servant girls who are not yet 15 years old represent themselves as having reached that age, so as to be more readily taken into service.

The Indoor Domestic Servants in 1871 numbered 1,275,747;* so that the increase in this class of persons in the course of the decade was less than 1 per cent. As the population has increased more than 14 per cent., it is possible that the frequently heard complaint of householders as to the increasing difficulty in finding suitable servants may have a real foundation.

The above account refers simply to the Indoor Servants in private families; that is to say, it excludes Coachmen, Grooms, and Gardeners, who are dealt with in other paragraphs; neither does it include the 62,310 Inn Servants, nor the 92,474 Charwomen, nor the 180,078 persons engaged in Laundries. If all these and similar forms of service be included, the total number of servants, domestic or other, was no less than 1,803,810, as already stated.

5. Commercial Class.

In the Commercial Class are included not only the persons directly engaged in Commerce, that is to say, the Merchants, Bankers, and Insurers, with their Agents, Clerks, and Travellers, the Accountants and the Auctioneers, but also the persons engaged in Conveyance and Storage. The whole class as thus constituted comprised 980,128, or, in round numbers, a million persons. Of these, the first order, the persons directly engaged in commerce, numbered 316,865; and the second order, the persons engaged in conveyance and storage, numbered 663,263. But if we also take into consideration, as we shall do, those industries outside the class that are indirectly subservient to conveyance, we shall have a much larger total; conveyance and storage by themselves, as thus construed, occupying a million persons.

COMMERCIAL
CLASS.

Among the headings in the Table relating to the Mercantile Class are some that are not very satisfactory. Such is "Merchant" itself. What constitutes a Merchant? Probably it would be said that the term applies to any wholesale dealer on a very large scale. But there are many large wholesale dealers who do not call themselves merchants, and many retail dealers who give themselves this designation. There are Wine and Spirit Merchants, Corn Merchants, Tea Merchants, Merchant Tailors, Rag Merchants, and the like, many of whom deal by retail. The rule adopted by us was, that whenever the nature of the goods in which the merchant dealt was stated, the individual should be classed by the character of his merchandise; but that when

Merchants

* No correction for "retired" has been made in this case in the 1871 total. For the great bulk of female servants retire by marriage, or by entering on other occupations, and would not return themselves, unless exceptionally, as "retired domestic servant."

the kind of goods was not stated, the simple return being "Merchant," without further specification, or when the name of the country only was given with which the merchant traded, e.g., East India Merchant, he should be placed under the heading "Merchant." Of such persons the number was 10,359, whereas in 1871 the number placed under this heading was 15,936. Doubtlessly, the term Merchant must have been used with a less restricted signification in the tabulation of 1871 than on the present occasion.

Commercial Travellers.

That no such depression as these figures by themselves might be supposed to indicate really occurred in commerce may be inferred from the numbers returned under the less vague and indefinite heading "Commercial Traveller." Of these there were 35,478, or twice as many as in 1871. Among them were 878 European foreigners.

Commercial Clerks.

The Commercial Clerks numbered 181,457, and were also twice as many as were so classed in 1871, but the term was used in different ways on the two occasions. In 1871 the clerks in factories were placed to the account of the special manufacture in the office of which they were engaged. For instance, a clerk in a cotton warehouse was placed to Cotton Manufacture; but in 1881 all clerks, employed in any branch of commerce or industry, were assigned, not to that special branch, but to the general heading "Commercial Clerk." The heading was thus made to include all clerks excepting Civil Service, Army, Navy, Law, Bank, Insurance, and Railway Clerks. The returns, therefore, for 1881 and 1871 are not comparable. Of the 181,457 Commercial Clerks 3,327 were European foreigners, 1,795 being natives of the German Empire.

Merchants and Bankers, though their business keeps them in the daytime in towns, yet so often live outside that a comparison of the numbers present on the night of the Census in the respective great towns would hardly be of much interest. But it is otherwise with the Commercial Clerks as a rule, and we find that of the 181,457 enumerated, 116,520 were present in one or other of the 47 urban districts that had populations exceeding 50,000 persons. There were 60,605 in London, with 1,847 more in West Ham and 1,195 in Croydon, which in this respect may be looked on almost as parts of London, making together 63,647. Next to London came Liverpool with Birkenhead, where 10,961 clerks were enumerated. Then followed Manchester and Salford, together accounting for 7,324, Birmingham and Aston with 4,907, Leeds with 2,523, Sheffield with 2,265, Bristol with 2,253, Newcastle-on-Tyne with 1,993, Kingston-on-Hull with 1,817, Bradford with 1,568, and Nottingham with 1,346. In none of the other towns did the number reach 1,000.

Agents.

The Agents, Brokers, and Factors numbered 31,208, and were also vastly in excess of the number so returned in 1871; but these terms are used in so vague and indefinite a manner that not much importance can be attached to the returns.

Bankers.

The Bankers, together with the Bank Clerks and generally the Bank Service, numbered 16,055, and exceeded the corrected total for 1871 by 35 per cent.

Persons engaged in Insurance.

The increase was still greater among Persons engaged in Insurance. Of these, 15,068 were enumerated, whereas the number returned in 1871, after including 253 Underwriters and 11 Average Adjusters, was only 5,687, or not much more than one-third. This enormous apparent increase naturally leads us to suppose that the method of tabulation must have differed in 1871 from that pursued in 1881, but we can find no evidence that such was the case.

Accountants, Auctioneers, &c.

The Accountants numbered 11,606, and were 20 per cent. in excess of the corrected total in 1871; and, lastly, the Auctioneers, Valuers, House Agents, 10,075 in number, had increased apparently more than 60 per cent. Some small part of this apparent increase was due to the fact that in 1881 all Valuers were placed to this heading, whereas in 1871 some Valuers were classed by the commodities which they valued, Valuers of Mines, for instance, going to Mine Service, and Valuers of Timber and Wood to Timber Merchant. This change, however, can scarcely have had any very important effect on the figures, and, after all allowance for it, the growth under this heading must have been enormous.

Conveyance of goods and of passengers.

The number of persons engaged either directly in the Conveyance of Goods and Passengers, or in the industries that are subservient to such traffic, is enormous. The ramifications of these branches of industry are so wide and so complicated that it is impossible to follow them all out, and we must content ourselves with an estimate of the main contributories. The traffic may be either by road, by railway, or by water, and it will be convenient to estimate the three separately.

We will begin with Road traffic; and under it include the following trades and Road traffic businesses:—

Road Contractor, Surveyor	-	-	-	1,326
Road Labourer	-	-	-	10,947
Turnpike-keeper	-	-	-	1,104
Total engaged in making and keeping roads				13,377
Makers of Carriages and other Vehicles	-	-	-	27,006

Saddlers, Harness makers	-	-	-	23,866
Total engaged in making vehicles and harness				79,604
Horse Proprietor, Breeder	-	-	-	2,233

Omnibus, Cab, Livery-stable, &c., keeper	-	-	-	6,787
Carrier, Carter, Haulier	-	-	-	125,342
Tramway Service	-	-	-	2,650
Total engaged in driving or in care of horses				281,534
Total engaged in Road Traffic				374,515

Among the occupations that are included in the above reckoning is one that is dying out, namely, Turnpike-keeper. The number fell from 3,928 in 1871 to 1,104 in 1881. On the other hand, there are two that barely appeared in the returns for 1871, but had gained very largely in 1881, and, though as yet not of much importance, doubtlessly will make a much more considerable figure in 1891. These are Tramway service, the persons employed in which rose from 63 in 1871 to 2,650 in 1881; and the making of Bicycles and other Velocipedes, which occupied only 12 persons in 1871, but under which 1,072 were classed in 1881, chiefly at Coventry.

Let us now estimate in the same general way the persons engaged in Railway traffic and its ancillary industries. Railway traffic.

Railway Contractors	-	-	-	1,182
Railway Labourers	-	-	-	36,850
Platelayers	-	-	-	21,997
Total engaged in making and keeping railways				60,029
Railway Carriage-makers	-	-	-	7,570
Locomotive Engine-makers	-	-	-	?

Guards	-	-	-	10,296
Engine-drivers, Stokers	-	-	-	22,856
Pointsmen, Level-crossing Men	-	-	-	6,205
Other Railway Officials and Servants	-	-	-	100,051
Total engaged with trains or stations				139,408
Total engaged in Railway Traffic				207,007

We can give no estimate of the Locomotive Engine Makers, who are merged in the makers of engines of all kinds, nor of the Rail-makers, who are lumped with the iron and steel industries, nor of many other subsidiary trades that might otherwise be included.

Water traffic.	There remains Traffic by Water, under which come—
	Ship, Boat, Barge Builders	-	-	21,741
	Shipwright, Ship-carpenter (ashore)	-	-	23,930
	Ship Riggers, Chandlers, Fitters	-	-	2,861
	Anchor, Chain Manufacturers	-	-	5,029
	Mast, Yard, Oar, Block, maker	-	-	1,419
	Sail-makers	-	-	4,129
	Total engaged in making or equipping vessels			59,109
	Seamen (Merchant Service) enumerated	-	-	95,093
	Seamen (English and Welsh)* abroad	-	-	63,330
	Bargemen, Lightermen, Watermen	-	-	30,223
	Boatmen on Seas	-	-	1,570
	Pilots	-	-	2,991
	Ship Stewards, Cooks	-	-	6,767
	Total seagoing persons			199,974
	Navigation Service (on shore)	-	-	4,697
	Harbour, Dock, Lighthouse Service	-	-	42,643
	Total of Shore Service			47,340
	Total engaged in Water Traffic			306,423

The result of this necessarily imperfect estimate of the persons engaged directly or indirectly in the conveyance of goods and passengers is a total of 887,945; and if in addition to these we reckon in the 32,026 persons who were employed in storage, either as Warehousemen or as Weighers, and allow that about two-thirds of the 131,171 persons returned as Messengers, Porters, or Watchmen were occupied in portering of goods, we have eventually a total of a million of the population employed in transport and its subsidiary industries.

6. Agricultural Class.

AGRICULTURAL CLASS. Under the various headings that are placed together to form the Agricultural Class 1,383,184 persons were enumerated; which number showed, as compared with the total in 1871, duly corrected for comparison, a decline of 8·2 per cent. The Agricultural Class, however, comprises not only those who may properly be called agricultural, as being engaged in cultivation, but also 104,560 persons engaged about animals, many of whom, and especially the Fishermen, are in no sense agricultural persons. The persons engaged in the cultivation of farm lands, including woods and gardens, numbered 1,278,624, and showed a decline since 1871 of 9·3 per cent.

Farmers. In 1871 there were 249,907 Farmers and Graziers enumerated in England and Wales. In 1881 the number had fallen to 223,943, a decline of 25,964, or of 10·39 per cent. It is true that in 1871 "retired farmers" were included in the reckoning, whereas this was not the case in 1881. But, as has been previously stated, the allowance to be made on this account is probably at the outside some two per cent.; so that the decline in the number of farmers was real and very considerable. Moreover, coincidently with this decline in the number of farmers, there was a notable increase in the number of farm bailiffs. In 1871 these had numbered 16,476, but in 1881 they had risen to 19,377, that is had increased nearly 18 per cent. These figures clearly point to the surrendering of farm-holdings by tenant farmers, and their cultivation by the owner himself or his bailiff.

Agricultural Labourers. As regards Agricultural Labourers, there was also doubtlessly a very considerable decline in the interval between the last two enumerations, but it is difficult to deal satisfactorily with this class, because of the confusion between agricultural and other labourers in the schedules. Special attention was called this time to the importance of carefully stating the exact kind of labour in the schedules, and, owing to this, the returns of agricultural labourers were probably more complete in 1881 than on any previous occasion. At any rate we may be perfectly assured that the returns were fully as complete as in 1871, so that any apparent decline in the numbers of this class of persons will be, if anything, below and not above the mark, if we take care to allow the 2 per cent. already mentioned for the omission in 1881 of retired or superannuated labourers from the account. Now, in 1871 the Agricultural Labourers, the Indoor Farm Servants, the Shepherds, and the persons returned simply as Cottagers, amounted together to 981,988, or, after deduction of two per cent. for the superannuated, to 962,348, whereas in 1881 they numbered only 870,798. There was thus a decline of some 91,550, or of nearly 10 per cent., in this class of labourers. There was also a slight decline in another group of persons who may be regarded as an upper kind of farm labourers, namely, the sons, grandsons, and nephews of farmers, returned as living in the farmhouse and yet not stated to have had any definite occupation. These male relatives of farmers, who may be assumed to have been engaged in farm work, fell from 76,466 in 1871 to 75,197 in 1881.

This decline in the number of agricultural labourers was apparently not due to any falling off in the amount of land under cultivation; for it appears from the Agricultural Returns that though the total acreage of arable land in England and Wales fell from 14,946,179 in 1871 to 13,977,662 in 1881, yet this decline was much more than compensated by an increase in the permanent pasture from 11,376,298 to 13,471,238 acres; so that the acreage of arable and pasture land together had risen, from 26,322,477 in 1871 to 27,448,900 in 1881, an increase of 1,126,423 acres or of 4·28 per cent. To what extent the exchange of 968,517 acres of arable land for 2,094,940 acres of permanent pasture would affect the amount of labour required for cultivation is a question which we must leave to agricultural experts.

Some small indication, however, of a reason for the decline in the number of agricultural labourers is perhaps to be found in the fact that the Proprietors of, and Attendants on, Agricultural Machines, who only numbered 2,160 in 1871, had increased to 4,260 in 1881, that is to say, they had doubled in number in the course of the ten years. Machinery had taken the place of hand labour. In 1871 the ratio of agricultural labourers of one kind or other to cultivated land was 3·95 labourers to 100 acres; in 1881 the proportion of labourers to the same area was 3·45, that is to say, the labour had diminished by 12·7 per cent. for like areas of cultivation.

Although General Labourers are not grouped in the agricultural class, with which we are now more especially concerned, yet, inasmuch as there is admittedly a certain amount of confusion in the returns between general and agricultural labourer, it may be well to deal here with this group of workers, and it will be convenient to give a summary view of all such labourers as were abstracted separately.

	1871 (Corrected numbers).	1881.
Agricultural Labourers - - -	962,348	870,798

	1,520,926	1,500,361

There is a considerable increase under each heading, excepting the agricultural, the general labourers having increased 10·6 per cent., the railway labourers 33·2 per cent., and the road labourers 34·6 per cent. The whole mass of labourers put together, exclusive of labourers in more specialised occupations, was 1,520,926 in 1871, and was 1,500,361, or practically the same, in 1881. Thus the class of labourers had remained stationary, while the general population had increased by 14·36 per cent.

Had the labouring class increased in the same ratio as the general population there would have been 239,016 more of them than were actually enumerated. This number, therefore, may be supposed either to have emigrated or to have adopted more specialised kinds of work.

Passing from the cultivation of fields and pastures to that of gardens, we find some strange differences between the figures for 1871 and for 1881. The number of Market Gardeners had apparently gone down enormously, from 98,069 to 65,882, while the number of Nurserymen and Seedsmen had gone up, namely, from 5,495 to 7,755. If, however, we look to the heading "Domestic Gardener," we find that the number given in 1871 was 18,688, while the number returned in 1881 was 74,648. It is quite plain that there has been some confusion between Market Gardeners and Domestic Gardeners. In 1881, when a man returned himself simply as Gardener, he was taken, in the absence of any certainty, to be a Domestic Gardener, on the ground that this was likely to be the more numerous class. But our predecessors in 1871 took the contrary view, and considered the gardener undefined to be a Market Gardener. Clearly the only safe plan of comparison under these circumstances is to lump all Gardeners, market or domestic, together, and also with them to take in the Nurserymen and Seedsmen. These together in 1871 amounted to 122,252, or, after due deduction for the "retired," to 119,807, and had increased in 1881 to 148,285 or by 24 per cent.; so that garden cultivation, as measured by the number of persons employed in it, would appear to have grown at a much more rapid rate than the general population.

Fishermen.

The Fishermen, including 294 women, who were probably shrimp, cockle, or mussel gatherers, numbered 29,696. This tallies very nearly with the estimate formed by the Board of Trade, who calculated that the number of men and boys constantly employed in fishing and resident within the limits of the English and Welsh ports was 29,141 in 1881, in addition, however, to 12,519 other persons who, though not regular fishermen, were occasionally employed in fishing.

As compared with the corrected total for 1871, there was an increase of no less than 44 per cent. in the enumerated fishermen.

The produce of the industry of these fishermen, who were furnished with the implements of their craft by 1,733 Netmakers and 1,461 Tacklemakers, was distributed to the consumers by 17,906 Fishmongers; so that, disregarding the imported produce of foreign fishers, there was one seller to less than two catchers of fish. Neglecting, as insignificant in number, the few professional fishermen in inland waters, the fishermen are of course limited by the nature of their industry to the maritime districts. Their distribution, following the coast line, was as follows:—

7. Industrial Class.

INDUSTRIAL CLASS.

The Industrial Class, speaking generally, is the class of Makers and of Shopkeepers. It includes all persons with specified occupations who were not referred to the Professional, Domestic, Commercial, or Agricultural Classes, and by itself outnumbers all these put together. It comprised in 1881 no fewer than 6,373,367 persons, or 24·5 per cent. of the entire population of all ages and both sexes, and 57·0 per cent. of the population with specified occupations. After carefully correcting the figures so as to render them as nearly comparable as possible, it appears that this class increased by somewhat less than 11 per cent. in the interval between the last two Censuses; or in a lower ratio than the general population.

It will be impossible to deal with all the headings and sub-divisions in this huge class. We shall, therefore, make a selection of the chief groups, and confine ourselves to these.

Industries subservient to production of Books, &c.

A fairly natural group of industries may be made by putting together those which are mainly subservient to the production of literature. There are, in the first place, the Authors. Of these no accurate account can be given. Writers of books, and especially of the best books, are scarcely likely to return themselves in the occupation column as Authors. There were, however, 3,434 persons, probably mostly Journalists, who returned themselves either as Author, Editor, or Journalist, to whom may be added 1,200 more who returned themselves as engaged in various scientific pursuits, and who would also be probably contributors to literature. The Journalists were furnished with their daily material by 2,677 Short-hand writers and Reporters ; and the Authors had 1,083 persons to serve them in literary and scientific institutions. This gives us to begin with, 8,394 persons, as the direct or indirect contributors of literature, whom we borrow from the Professional Class.

The physical materials used by these persons are paper, which was derived from 18,629 persons employed in its manufacture, who in their turn received materials from 3,291 Rag-gatherers and dealers ; steel pens, made by 2,723 persons, almost all women ; pencils, made by 232 persons ; and ink, the makers of which were not separately abstracted, but were included with the Makers of Blacking and other Colouring Matter. These goods were sold by 15,241 Stationers, who employed 2,108 persons, almost all women, merely to make envelopes. This second division of our group makes up in all 42,224 persons supplying writers with their materials.

Then come the Printers, numbering 61,290 ; besides 2,265 Engravers, 6,721 Lithographers, Copper or Steel-plate printers, and Map-makers. The type used by these printers was made by 1,169 Type founders and Cutters.

The printed matter was dealt with by 20,097 Bookbinders, and eventually distributed by 9,910 Publishers, Booksellers, and Librarians. If we also take into account 5,515 Newspaper Agents and News-room keepers, and 1,440 Sellers and Printers of Musical publications, with a few nondescripts, we have eventually a total of 159,094 persons contributing directly or indirectly to literature. Of course all the products of these persons were not literature. The Paper manufacture, for instance, supplied many other industries than the literary. But, on the other hand, there are numerous persons who contribute to fill our bookshelves who cannot be taken into the reckoning ; so that the total may stand as a rough approximation.

Comparing the returns for the chief of the above-mentioned occupations in 1881 with those in 1871, we find, after due correction of the figures, that the Papermakers had increased 13·3 per cent., the Printers 39·6 per cent., the Binders 32·5 per cent., the Stationers 30·7 per cent., and the Publishers, Booksellers, and Librarians 7·7 per cent. In these industries there has been, as in many other handicrafts, a tendency to use female in place of male labour, doubtless on economical grounds. This is shown by the following statement of the proportion of females to 100 males employed in each industry in 1871 and in 1881 :—

Paper manufacture	- 65	80
Printer	- 2	4
Bookbinder	- 95	111
Stationer	- 34	53
Bookseller, Publisher, &c.	- 15	17

Even in the making of envelopes, which has always been a specially female occupation, the males have lost ground ; for in 1871 there were 1,012 females to 100 males employed, whereas in 1881 the female proportion had risen to 1,105.

The number of persons working and dealing in machines and implements was 267,976, who were almost exclusively males. Some of the smaller sub-divisions of this order have already been casually noticed, such as the Musical Instrument Makers, the Surgical Instrument Makers, and the Makers of Apparatus for Games. There remain, however, the three chief sub-orders, namely, the Machine Makers, the Tool-makers, and the makers of Clocks, Watches, and Philosophical Instruments.

Makers of Machines
ments.

The makers of Machines of all kinds numbered 160,797, and, after due correction of the figures so as to make them comparable, showed an increase of 28 per cent. upon the return for 1871. The greatest increase was among the makers of Spinning and Weaving machinery, who were 19,896 in number, and almost exactly twice as many as in 1871. The makers of Agricultural Machines and Implements numbered 4,119, and had increased 16 per cent. ; while the 6,940 Millwrights, the 26,170 Boiler-makers, the 64,663 Fitters and Turners, together with the 38,481 Makers of Engines and Machines other than spinning or weaving or agricultural, made up a total of 136,254, and showed an increase of 21 per cent. Of this last group of 136,254 persons, 25,864 were enumerated in Lancashire ; 17,529 in London ; 15,591 in the West Riding ; 11,132 in Durham ; 5,626 in Staffordshire ; 5,141 in Northumberland ; 3,596 in Warwickshire ; and 3,283 in Derbyshire. Of the 19,896 Spinning and Weaving Machinery makers, 9,110 were enumerated in Lancashire ; 7,257 in the West Riding ; 1,653 in Nottinghamshire ; 530 in Cheshire ; 452 in Leicestershire ; and 318 in Derbyshire.

Machinery
Makers.

Makers of Tools and Implements.

The Tool and Implement Makers numbered 48,556, and, as compared with the duly corrected total in 1871, showed an increase of scarcely more than 5 per cent. The chief sub-divisions under which they were grouped, and the number of persons in each sub-division, at the two Censuses, were as follows. The figures for 1871 have been corrected by a deduction of 2 per cent. for the retired.

	1871. (Corrected Numbers.)	1881.
Tool maker and dealer (undefined)	- - 7,474	9,353
Cutler and Scissors maker	- - 18,958	18,234
File maker	- - 8,821	8,967
Saw maker	- - 1,919	2,116
Pin maker	- - 673	729
Needle maker	- - 4,644	4,455
Steel-pen maker	- - 1,741	2,723
Pencil maker	- - 170	232
	44,400	46,809

It will be seen that though the smaller industries of Steel-pen, Pencil, and Pin making had increased, as also had the group as a whole, yet, under the chief heading of all, Cutler and Scissors maker, there had been a decline, as also under the heading of Needle maker.

The giant share of tool-making belongs to the West Riding, and especially to Sheffield. Of the 18,234 Cutlers and Scissors makers, no fewer than 16,449 were enumerated in this Riding, and of these 15,290 were in Sheffield. Similarly, of the 8,967 File makers, 6,756 were in this Riding, and of them 5,541 were in Sheffield; in this industry, however, Lancashire has a respectable share, 1,042 File makers having been enumerated in that county. Again, of the 2,116 Saw makers, there were 1,237 in Sheffield, and 130 others in the rest of the Riding. Altogether, of the 38,670 Cutlers, Scissors makers, File and Saw makers, and General Tool Makers and Dealers, who were enumerated in the country, no fewer than 27,553 were enumerated in the West Riding, and of these 24,206 were in Sheffield. The only other counties in which these tool-making industries can be said to be carried on, are Staffordshire, Warwickshire, and Lancashire, in which, respectively, 2,011, 2,783, and 2,168 such Tool makers and dealers were enumerated.

The manufactures of Needles, Pins, Steel-pens, and Pencils are carried on elsewhere. Of the 4,455 Needle makers, 2,394 were enumerated in Warwickshire, 1,555 in Worcestershire, 245 in Leicestershire, and 193 in Nottinghamshire, leaving only 68 scattered in other parts.

Of the 729 Pin makers, 406 were enumerated in Warwickshire, mostly in Birmingham and Aston, 180 were enumerated in Gloucestershire, in the Stroud district, and 51 in Worcestershire.

Of the 2,723 Steel-pen makers, 2,578 were enumerated in Birmingham and Aston, 75 in Worcestershire, and 30 in Staffordshire. This manufacture is almost exclusively in the hands of women, who outnumbered the men in the proportion of 1,138 women to 100 men.

The making of Pencils is carried on chiefly at Keswick, in Cumberland, in which county 116, or exactly half of the entire 232, were enumerated; of the remainder, 77 were enumerated in London, and 32 in Birmingham.

Makers of Clocks,
Watches, and Scientific Instruments.

From Tools and Implements we pass on to instruments of greater delicacy and complexity, such as Clocks, Watches, Optical and Philosophical Instruments. The total number of persons returned in this sub-order was 32,064, almost exclusively of the male sex, and was about 22 per cent. in excess of the corrected total in 1871.

The most important heading in the sub-order is that of the Watch and Clock makers, who numbered 23,351, and had increased 12 per cent. Probably, in many cases, the Watchmakers are not distinguishable from Goldsmiths, Silversmiths, and Jewellers, who are not included in this sub-order, but numbered 24,715, and had increased 14·5 per cent., or much in the same ratio as the population. The Opticians and Philosophical Instrument makers, also doubtlessly often mixed up with the Watchmakers, numbered 3,605, and had risen by 13·5 per cent. The Makers of Electrical Apparatus, who in 1871 only numbered 428, had risen with the development of electrical science to 2,522 in 1881. The remaining heading in the sub-order, Makers of Measuring and Weighing Apparatus, included 2,586 persons, showing an apparent increase in the decade of not far from 50 per cent. The tabulation, however, under this heading was probably somewhat uncertain.

The Makers of Weapons comprised 8,227 persons, of whom 2,741 were Gunsmiths. The Gunsmiths had declined very considerably in number since 1871, when 11,576 were returned. This is the more noticeable, inasmuch as the Gamekeepers had slightly increased in the same period, having risen from 12,431 to 12,633. Probably the reduction in the number of Gunsmiths is to be explained by the decline in the export of small fire-arms from the United Kingdom, which fell from an annual mean of 469,207 in 1870-71 to a mean of 259,563 in 1880-81,—a decline of 45 per cent. Of the 7,741 persons returned as Gunsmiths, 4,408, or considerably more than half, were enumerated in Birmingham or Aston.

Makers of Guns and Weapons.

The number of persons employed in Building trades, using this general term to include Architects, Builders, Carpenters, Joiners, Bricklayers, Masons, Slaters, Tilers, Plasterers, Whitewashers, Paperhangers, Plumbers, Painters, and Glaziers, amounted to 673,636. But in order to make a comparison with 1871 we must also include 4,150 Paviours, as in the Census of 1871 Masons and Paviours were not distinguished. This gives us a total of 677,786 persons employed in these allied branches of industry. The number engaged in the same trades in 1871 was 571,217, which is reduced by correction for the "retired" to 559,793. The growth of the Building trades, as shown by the number of persons engaged, was thus 21 per cent. in the course of the ten years. These trades, therefore, had grown in higher proportion than the general population.

Of what this army of Builders may have done in the course of the ten years in the way of repairs, alterations, additions, and substitution of new houses for old houses no account can be given. But, as shown in the Summary Table (Vol. I., Table I.), taking the inhabited and uninhabited houses together, there were 697,733 more houses in 1881 than in 1871. There were, moreover, 46,414 houses in course of construction at the date of the Census in 1881 against 37,803 in 1871.

If the Building trades had thus increased, we should expect to find a corresponding growth in those trades which provide the Builder with his materials, namely, among the Stone and Slate quarriers and workers, the Cement and Plaster makers, and the Brick and Tile makers; and this anticipation is justified by the figures. The numbers engaged in these industries in 1871 was, after correction for the retired, 81,928; it had grown in 1881 to 105,544, that is, it had increased by 29 per cent., or even in a higher ratio than the Builders themselves.

Stone, Slat
Cement,
Brick, and Tile industries.

From the Building trades, and those who supply the Builders with their materials, we pass naturally to the Furnishing trades. Under this heading a vast number of trades might be classed. We shall take, however, the following as forming the group, Upholsterers, Cabinet Makers, French Polishers, Locksmiths, Bellhangers, Gas Fitters, House and Shop Fittings Makers and Dealers, Wood Carvers, Carvers and Gilders, Furniture Dealers, and Carpet and Rug Manufacturers. The total number of persons returned as engaged in these trades was 124,355, while the corrected number in 1871 was 106,108. The growth in these trades had, therefore, been at the rate of nearly 17 per cent., or again more rapid than that of the population.

Furnishing
trades.

The Carpet and Rug Manufacture had grown 23 per cent., and, as in the other textile manufactures, there had been a great increase in the proportion of female to male labour employed in it. In 1871 the proportion was 47 to 100, in 1881 it was 59 to 100.

In the above account of the Furnishing industries we did not include the manufactures of Earthenware, China, and Glass, thinking it better to give the figures of these industries separately. The total workers and dealers in these articles numbered 74,407, showing an increase of 8 per cent. upon the corrected total for 1871. These industries, therefore, in contrast with the other Furnishing trades, do not appear to have grown in equal proportion with the population.

China,
Earthenware, and Glass manufacturers or dealers.

Putting out of the account the mere dealers in Glass and Earthenware, and confining ourselves to the Manufacturers, we find an increase of 5 per cent. in the Earthenware and China industry, and of 10 per cent. in the manufacture of Glass.

The Glass manufacture is almost monopolized by men, there being 19,938 men and only 1,692 women returned as engaged in it, or nearly twelve men to one woman. Not so the manufacture of China and Earthenware. Here the female sex has a considerable share, the males employed numbering 28,719, and the females 17,877.

The great bulk of the China and Earthenware Manufactures is carried on in Staffordshire; for of the 46,596 persons employed in these industries, no fewer than 36,230 were enumerated in this county.

The Glass manufacture is more widely distributed. For of the 21,630 persons engaged in it, 5,984 were enumerated in Lancashire, 3,591 in the West Riding, 2,884 in Durham, 2,769 in London, 2,089 in Worcestershire, 1,752 in Warwickshire, 1,151 in Staffordshire, and only 1,410 in all the other counties.

Carriage and
makers.

We have already incidentally spoken of Carriage and Harness makers, as also of Shipbuilders and Riggers, when we were dealing with the conveyance of goods. A few additional words are required, however, as to the comparison of the figures under these headings with those of 1871.

The Makers of Carriages and of Vehicles of all kinds, excepting bicycles, &c., numbered 62,236, and exceeded the corrected total in 1871 by 13·9 per cent. The Harness Makers numbered 23,866, and had increased by 5·8 per cent.

Ship Builders, &c.

The Ship and Boat Builders, including the Riggers, Fitters, Chandlers, Sailmakers, &c., numbered 54,080, whereas the uncorrected total in 1871 was only 45,164. The figures, however, are not comparable; for in 1871 the return did not include Shipwrights or others employed by the Government, who were classed on that occasion with "Government Messengers, Workmen," whereas in 1881 they were referred to their trade.

Purveyors of Food and Drink.

The Purveyors of Food form a very large class. They may be divided roughly into those who supply us with Animal Food, those who supply us with Bread and Vegetables, those who supply us with Groceries, and those who supply us with Spirituous or other Drinks.

The Purveyors of Animal Food, including 81,702 Butchers and Meat Salesmen, 3,591 Poulterers and Game Dealers, 17,906 Fishmongers, 16,584 Provision Curers and Dealers, 25,805 Milksellers, and 4,379 Buttermen and Cheesemongers, numbered in all 149,967, and exceeded the corrected total for 1871 by 15·4 per cent.

The Purveyors of Bread and Vegetables, including 23,462 Millers, 9,966 Corn or Flour Dealers, 71,032 Bakers, 25,534 Pastrycooks or Confectioners, and 29,614 Green-grocers and Fruiterers, numbered 159,608, and exceeded the corrected total for 1871 by 12·5 per cent.

The Dealers in Groceries, including 129,818 Grocers and Tea Dealers, 3,070 Sugar Refiners, and 1,509 Makers and Sellers of Mustard or other Condiments, numbered 134,397, and exceeded the corrected total for 1871 by 18·8 per cent.

The Purveyors of Spirituous Drinks, including 438 Hop Dealers, 9,531 Maltsters, 24,567 Brewers, 86,689 Innkeepers, Publicans, and Beersellers, together with 7,889 Wine or Spirit Merchants, and 6,044 Cellarmen, numbered 135,158, and showed, as compared with the corrected total for 1871, a decline of 5·8 per cent.

It thus appears that, while in each of the other great branches of food-supply there was a growth, fairly proportionate to the growth of the population, in the supply of spirituous drinks there was exceptionally a decline: The actual decline was, as shown, in the ratio of 5·8 per cent. But, if we take into consideration the growth of the population, it was much more, these trades having fallen off, for equal populations, no less than 17·7 per cent.

If to the above-mentioned Purveyors of Food be added 4,662 Makers and Dealers in Mineral Waters, 8,173 Coffee-house or Eating-house Keepers, and 30 nondescripts, we have a total of 591,995 persons engaged in purveying food; with whom are further grouped in the table 37,376 Keepers of Lodging or Boarding Houses, making the total in this order amount to 629,371 persons.

Tobacconists.

Many of those who deal in food also deal in tobacco; but the number of persons who were returned as dealing in this commodity, or in pipes and other smoking apparatus, was 22,175, or 34 per cent. more than the corrected total in 1871.

Makers of Textile Fabrics.

The persons returned as working and dealing in Textile fabrics numbered 1,053,648, or, in round numbers, a million.

Cotton Manufacture.

By far the most important of these industries is the Manufacture of Cotton and Cotton goods. The persons engaged in this manufacture, including 8,187 Fustian makers, 1,891 Tape makers, and 2,170 Thread makers, numbered in all 500,025; to whom are further to be added 26,682 Cotton printers, dyers, and bleachers, and 3,554 Cotton warehousemen and dealers. This makes up a grand total of 530,261 persons, without reckoning in the 82,362 Drapers or the 1,884 Manchester warehousemen, who deal in other goods besides cotton. Thus the cotton industries by themselves more than equal all the other textile industries put together.

The Cotton printers and dyers, as also the Cotton warehousemen and dealers, are chiefly males, but the Cotton manufacture itself employs very many more females than males, the number of the former being 310,374 and of the latter 189,651, or 164 females to 100 males. Moreover, the proportion of females to males has increased with successive Censuses. In 1861 there were 130 females employed to 100 males; in 1871 the female proportion rose to 148; and in 1881, as already mentioned, to 164. Not only has the proportion of females to males increased, but the absolute number of males has declined. The entire increase has been on the side of the women. Putting aside the printers and dyers, and the warehousemen and dealers, we have the following figures for three successive Censuses :—

EMPLOYED IN COTTON MANUFACTURE.				1861.	1871.	1881.
Males	-	-	-	202,540	192,881	189,651
Females	-	-	-	264,166	286,258	310,374
Total	-	-	-	466,706	479,139	500,025

In 1871 the increase under the head of Cotton manufacture was 2·7 per cent. upon the total for 1861; and, if we correct the figures for 1871 by a deduction of two per cent. for the “retired” operatives, as previously explained, the increase in 1881 was 6·5 per cent. This manufacture, therefore, if measured by the number of persons employed, increased in the interval between 1871 and 1881 more rapidly than in the preceding decennium, but nevertheless did not grow in equal proportion to the population. According, however, to the returns of the Board of Trade, the increase, as measured by the declared quantity of Cotton goods exported from the United Kingdom between 1870–1 and 1880–1, was 39 per cent.

Of the 530,261 persons employed in Cotton industries, including again the printers and dyers and the Cotton warehousemen and dealers, no fewer than 432,146 were enumerated in Lancashire, 28,485 in Cheshire, 40,606 in the West Riding of Yorkshire, 14,854 in Derbyshire, and only 14,170 in all the other counties.

The Manufacture of Linen forms but a small industry in this country, and an industry, moreover, that appears to be declining; for, whereas in 1871 the corrected number of persons employed in it amounted to 17,772, in 1881 there were but 12,065, showing a decline of 32 per cent. As in most other textile manufactures, the female outnumbered the male hands. There were 7,853 of the former to 4,212 of the latter. This manufacture is mainly carried on in the West Riding of Yorkshire and in Lancashire, where 6,860 and 2,840 persons respectively were enumerated as engaged in it. Linen Manufacture.

More important is the Lace industry. This employed 44,144 persons, of whom 32,785 were females. But this industry also seems to have declined, for the corrected number of persons engaged in it in 1871 was 48,383, the falling-off in the following decade being 8·8 per cent. The probable explanation of this decline is the gradual and increasing supersession of pillow-made or bone lace by lace bobbin-net, first made by hand-machines, but more recently by water-power or steam-power. This explanation of the matter is confirmed by the fact that the decline occurred in those counties where hand-made lace is made, namely, Bedfordshire, Devonshire, Buckinghamshire, and Northamptonshire, while in Nottinghamshire and the adjoining part of Derbyshire, where lace is made by machinery, there was an increase of no less than 36 per cent. Lace Manufacture.

The following are the figures for each of the lace-making counties for the last three Censuses, the figures for 1861 and 1871 being uncorrected.

COUNTY.	1861.	1871.	1881.
Buckinghamshire	8,501	8,106	4,456
Northamptonshire	8,221	6,404	3,232
Bedfordshire	6,728	6,077	4,792
Devonshire	5,263	4,658	3,428
Nottinghamshire	16,712	16,620	22,228
Derbyshire	1,977	1,725	2,233

The substitution of machinery for hand labour further explains why the proportion of females to males employed in this industry declined in the decade 1871–1881, whereas in other textile manufactures the reverse was the case, and the proportion of female labour increased. In 1871 the females employed in Lace-making were 83 per cent., whereas in 1881 they were but 74 per cent., of the whole.

Hosiery Manufacture.

The Hosiery manufacture occupied 40,372 persons, and showed a slight decline as compared with 1871, when the corrected number was 41,197. This industry is almost confined to Leicestershire and Nottinghamshire, with the adjoining part of Derbyshire, there being also a small isolated factory in Cardiganshire. The figures for these counties are as follows:—

COUNTY.	1861. (Uncorrected.)	1871. (Uncorrected.)	1881.
Leicestershire - - -	22,276	20,286	21,594
Nottinghamshire - - -	18,452	17,161	14,155
Derbyshire - - -	2,960	2,286	2,275
Cardiganshire - - -	515	819	799

In this manufacture, also, female labour appears to be supplanting male labour to a considerable extent. In 1871 there were 114 males employed to 100 females, but in 1881 the proportion was exactly inverted and there were 114 females to 100 males.

Woollen Manufactures.

Next in importance to Cotton among textile fabrics come Wool and Worsted. The workers and dealers in these substances, excluding those employed in the Carpet and Rug manufacture, of which we shall speak separately, numbered 233,256; and, comparing this total with the corrected total for 1871, it would appear that these great industries had slightly declined, viz., by 1·5 per cent., in the course of the decade.

Cloth Manufacture.

The Woollen Cloth manufacture occupied 115,808 persons, about 8 per cent. less than the corrected number in 1871. In 1871 the females employed in it were considerably outnumbered by the males, there being only 79 of the former to 100 of the latter. But in 1881 female labour had taken the place of male labour to such an extent that the males were slightly outnumbered, the proportion being 102 females to 100 males.

Cloth manufacture is mainly carried on in the West Riding of Yorkshire, where 85,962 persons employed in it were enumerated. Next came Lancashire with 11,317; Gloucestershire with 4,403; Wiltshire with 3,886; and Somersetshire with 1,881. The order was the same in 1871.

Worsted and Stuff Manufactures.

The Worsted and Stuff manufactures occupied 99,237 persons, which was almost exactly the same as the corrected total in 1871. In this industry the female outnumbered the male hands in much higher proportion than was the case in the Cloth manufacture. In the latter, as we have seen, there were 102 female hands to 100 male hands, but in the Worsted and Stuff manufacture the females were in the proportion of 180 to 100 males. As in other textile industries, they had partly superseded the males in the course of the decade; for in 1871 there were but 162 female to 100 male hands.

This manufacture is almost exclusively confined to the West Riding of Yorkshire, where 95,485 of the 99,237 were enumerated. Of the remainder, 1,570 were in Lancashire, and 894 in Leicestershire, leaving only 1,288 elsewhere.

Blanket and Flannel Manufactures.

The Blanket manufacture occupied 2,687 persons, whereas in 1871 only 1,845 persons were returned under it. Of the 2,687 persons engaged in this industry, 2,362 were enumerated in the West Riding and 220 in Oxfordshire against 1,681 and 125 respectively in 1871.

The Flannel manufacture had remained stationary during the decade, for in 1871 there were 1,158 and in 1881 there were 1,126 persons engaged therein.

Carpet Manufacture.

The Carpet and Rug Manufacture employed 13,985 persons, which was 23 per cent. in excess of the corrected number in 1871. This industry differs from other textile manufactures in having a larger number of male than of female workers. The males were 8,795, and the females only 5,190. Even here, however, a tendency to substitute female for male labour is apparent; for while in 1871 there were 47 women to 100 men in the business, in 1881 the female proportion had risen to 59.

The main seats of this manufacture are in Worcestershire and in the West Riding of Yorkshire; and it would appear from the following table that the increase in 1871-81 occurred exclusively in the former county.

	1861. (Uncorrected.)	1871. (Uncorrected.)	1881.
Worcestershire - - -	1,673	3,590	6,659
West Riding of Yorkshire -	3,735	5,056	4,621

The persons employed in the manufacture of Silk and Silk goods, including Satin, Velvet, Ribbon, Crape, and Gauze, numbered 60,595. To these must be added 1,680 Silk Dyers or Printers, and 1,302 Silk Merchants, making a total of 63,577 returned as engaged in making or selling Silk goods. As compared with the corrected total for 1871, this showed a decline of 22·2 per cent. The decline was at the rate of 22·5 per cent. in the Silk, Satin, Velvet, and Crape manufactures; and of 31·9 per cent. in the Ribbon manufacture, under which small industry 2,064 persons were returned. The Silk Merchants declined 17·0 per cent. The Silk Dyers and Printers did not participate in the decline, but on the contrary increased by about 5·5 per cent. Coincidentally with this decline in the persons employed in the Silk manufacture there was an even greater decline in the amount of raw silk imported into the country. This fell, in round numbers, from 14½ million pounds in the two years 1870 and 1871, to 6½ million pounds in 1880 and 1881,—a fall of 55 per cent.

In the Silk and Ribbon manufactures, as in most other textile industries, the females employed largely outnumbered the males, there being 224 of the former to 100 of the latter. The proportion, moreover, of the females had increased; for in 1871 there were but 208 females to 100 males.

The counties which were the chief seats of the Silk manufacture, and the numbers of persons employed in each of such counties, were as follow; the returns for 1871 not being corrected for “retired.”

It will be noticed that in the West Riding of Yorkshire there was a very considerable increase in the decade preceding the Census of 1881; that in Norfolk the number remained practically unaltered; but that in each of the other counties there was a large falling off. The increase in the West Riding was due to the establishment of a large factory at Bradford.

The Workers in Hemp and other fibrous materials numbered 22,471, the males employed in these rough textile industries outnumbering the females, of whom there were but 60 to 100 males. In some of the headings, however, that come into this Sub-order the female workers predominated. Thus of the 3,478 persons returned as engaged in the manufacture of Hemp, Jute, or Cocoa fibre, 2,297 were women; of the 1,733 Networkers, 1,481 were women; and so also were 1,594 of the 2,169 persons engaged in the manufacture or sale of Sacking and Sacks. Of the Hemp industries, the largest is that of the Rope and Twine Makers. These numbered 11,751, mostly males, and, as compared with the corrected total of 1871, showed a slight increase. Ropemaking is carried on in all parts of the country; but the localities in which the numbers of workers were highest were, Lancashire 2,384, London 1,404, Dorsetshire 1,118, and the West Riding of Yorkshire 1,046; so that those four areas between them account for a full half of the Rope and Twine makers.

Persons
working and dealing in Dress.

In treating of the great group of "Persons working and dealing in Dress" we shall depart from the table as printed, by omitting the 14,933 Hair-dressers and Wigmakers, and by including the 82,362 Drapers and Mercers. The group as thus constituted numbered a million, or, more exactly, 1,048,534 persons, of whom 404,096 were males, and 644,438 were females. As compared with the corrected returns for 1871, this great group taken as a whole had increased by only 7·1 per cent. There were, however, as we shall see, enormous differences in this respect between the several kinds of dress fabrication.

Milliners.

Among these workers in dress by far the most numerous were the Milliners, Dressmakers, and Staymakers. These together numbered 360,932 persons, almost exclusively women, and exceeded the corrected total for 1871 by 18·4 per cent.

Tailors.

The Tailors numbered 160,648, and exceeded the corrected total for 1871 by 9·4 per cent. Thus the Milliners, Dressmakers, and Staymakers had increased almost twice as much as the Tailors. There was one Milliner, &c. to every 37 females, and one Tailor to every 79 males. The proportion of females to males in this latter employment had considerably increased; in 1871 there was one tailoress to three tailors, whereas in 1881 there was one to two.

stresses.

The Seamstresses and Shirtmakers numbered 83,244, and had grown since 1871 by only 5·2 per cent. It is true that there were also 7,524 women returned vaguely as Machine-workers or Machinists, and probably a large proportion of these were Seamstresses; but this cannot explain the small growth of this class of Needle-workers since 1871; for, in the Census of that date, the indefinite Machine-workers or Machinists were vastly more numerous, the females under this heading numbering no fewer than 20,971. The small growth, or actual decline, in the number of seamstresses is probably to be explained by the increased use of the sewing-machine; though it may also be true that many women are now returned as "tailoress" or as "milliner's assistant" who were formerly returned as "seamstress," the line of demarcation between these sewing industries being very vague.

Putting the three groups together as representing needle-workers we have a total of 604,824 persons, and an increase since 1871 of 14·0 per cent., or much the same as the increase of the population. The comparison, however, with 1871 is much vitiated by the large number of indefinite female machinists returned at that date.

Shoemakers.

The Boot and Shoe Makers, exclusive of 7,503 Patten and Clog Makers, numbered 216,556. They had slightly declined in number since 1871, when their corrected total was 219,213. If we look still further back to earlier Censuses, we find that there was an even greater decline in this industry in the interval between 1861 and 1871, so far as can be judged from the number of workers. Here are the figures, corrected for the retired, and for slight differences of classification:—

1851	-	-	-	235,447
1861	-	-	-	246,493
1871	-	-	-	219,213
1881	-	-	-	216,556

As boots and shoes are among the most indispensable of goods, it is highly improbable that their production should have declined, while the population increased by 14·36 per cent. The most probable explanation is that the use of machinery has gradually supplanted hand-work in this industry; and this accords with the fact that in Northamptonshire and Leicestershire, which are the chief, though not the only, seats of the manufacture of machine-made boots, the number of bootmakers increased enormously, namely, 34 per cent., in the interval between 1861 and 1871, and 41 per cent. in the interval between 1871 and 1881. The making of boots and shoes is mainly in the hands of male workers; but, as in many other industries so in this, there has been a great increase in the proportion of female labour. In 1871 the proportion was 13 females to 100 males; but in 1881 the proportion was 20 to 100.

Hatters.

The Hatters, excluding Straw-hat Makers, numbered 22,689, and were mostly men. Their increase since 1871 was under seven per cent.

The makers of Straw Hats and Bonnets, and generally of Straw Plait, numbered 30,984, and showed a decline since 1871 of no less than 35 per cent. This industry had indeed shown signs of decay or of arrest in the preceding intercensal period, during which the numbers of persons employed in it remained stationary in spite of the growth of the population. This industry is practically monopolized by females, though a few males are engaged in it as agents and dealers. It is confined to a few counties; for of the 30,984 persons returned under it, 17,316 were enumerated in Bedfordshire, 7,882 in Hertfordshire, 1,741 in Buckinghamshire, 930 in Essex, 781 in Suffolk, and only 2,334 in the rest of England and Wales.

Straw Plait
ture.

Notwithstanding the smallness of the increase in the number of Hatters, and the great decline in the Straw Plait manufacture, it appears from the returns of the Board of Trade that the export of hats of all kinds from the United Kingdom rose from 452,153 dozen in 1871 to 1,025,931 dozen in 1881.

The Hosiery manufacture employed 40,372 persons, more than half of whom were females; but of this manufacture we have spoken already, when dealing with Textile fabrics.

Hosiery M anufacture,

In previous Censuses, an attempt was made to divide the Glovers into those who made leather gloves and those who made gloves of other materials. But the distinction could not be made with any accuracy, as a large proportion of these workers return themselves simply as Glover, without specifying the material. We have therefore in this case, as in many others, abandoned a distinction which could not be made in a satisfactory manner. The Glovers of all kinds numbered 15,524, of whom 13,261, or 85 per cent., were females. The corrected total for 1871 was 22,590, so that this industry would appear to have declined no less than 31 per cent. How far this decline is to be explained by the use of sewing machines, and how far by increased importation of foreign-made gloves, we are unable to say. Of the 15,524 Glovers, 4,913 were enumerated in Somersetshire, 3,003 in Worcestershire, 2,180 in Dorsetshire, 1,533 in Oxfordshire, 1,242 in Devonshire, and 2,653 in the rest of England and Wales.

Glovers.

The Drapers, Mercers, Hosiers, and Haberdashers together amounted to 91,927, and as compared with 1871 showed an increase of 13·2 per cent.; that is to say, they had increased in nearly the same proportion as the population.

Drapers,
Mercers,
Hosiers, H
berdashers,
&c.

To the industries already mentioned must be further added 616 Shawl makers, 6,407 Button makers, 8,230 Umbrella, Parasol, and Stick makers, 600 Accoutrement makers, and 2,302 Old Clothes dealers and nondescripts, making up as before said a grand total of slightly over a million. The list of industries grouped under Dress might indeed be further extended. We might, for instance, have included the 2,421 Embroiderers, the 6,499 Trimming makers, and the 8,148 Furriers and Skinners. So also a very large proportion of the persons employed in the manufactures of Cotton, Woollen, Worsted, Linen, and Silk fabrics should be reckoned as ministering to dress. But all these we have excluded as only partly employed in the preparation of dress materials. Were it possible to make due allowance for these, in all probability it would be found that the number of persons occupied in clothing us could scarcely be less than a million and a half.

The Miners of all kinds numbered 437,670; and with 2,291 Mining-engineers, and 3,602 persons engaged in Mine service, made up a total of 443,563.

Miners and Mine Service.

The great bulk of the Miners were employed in the coal-fields; the Coal-miners by themselves numbering no fewer than 381,763, or 87 per cent. of the whole. Of these Coal-miners 65,515 were enumerated in Durham, 60,801 in Lancashire, 55,818 in the West Riding of Yorkshire, 44,864 in Glamorganshire, 37,514 in Staffordshire, 20,752 in Northumberland, 18,959 in Nottinghamshire, 17,424 in Derbyshire, 14,936 in Monmouthshire, 5,416 in Denbighshire, 5,393 in Cumberland, 5,079 in Somersetshire, and 29,292 in the remaining counties.

Next in numbers to the Coal-miners came the Ironstone miners, numbering 26,110, and mainly enumerated in the North Riding of Yorkshire, Cumberland, Lancashire, and Staffordshire. Then followed the Tin-miners, 12,402 in number, and almost entirely in Cornwall. After these, the Lead-miners, of whom 11,226 were returned, and who formed two main divisions, one in the Welsh counties of Cardigan, Montgomery, Flint, Denbigh and Carnarvon, in which five counties, 5,357, or nearly half the whole, were enumerated; the other in the Northern English counties of Derby, York, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmorland, which together accounted for 4,780 more. Of the remainder, 407 were in Cornwall, 302 in Shropshire, and 380 in all other parts.

The Copper-miners numbered only 4,067, and of these 3,505 were in Cornwall and Devonshire, 279 in the Isle of Anglesey, and only 283 in the other counties. Finally, there were 2,102 miners of other or unspecified minerals.

Comparing the figures for 1881 with the corrected figures for 1871, we find that the persons returned as working in mines had increased in the interval by 24 per cent. Unfortunately so large a number of miners were returned in 1871 without specification of the kind of mineral in which they worked, that it is impossible to make any accurate comparison of the numbers of each separate class of miners at the two periods. It is plain, however, that Coal-mining at any rate has increased very largely; for even if we consider that all the 38,712 undefined miners in 1871 were Coal-miners, which is highly improbable, and further make no deduction for the "retired" Coal-miners, we still have an increase of no less than 23 per cent. We may be sure, then, that Coal-mining, as measured by the number of persons employed, increased between 1871 and 1881 by fully 20 per cent.; and this tallies with the returns made by the Board of Trade, from which it appears that the output of Coal in 1881 was 31·4 per cent. more than in 1871.

We can also make some kind of comparison in the case of the Tin-miners, in the following way:—Cornwall is the only county in which there is any considerable number of Tin-miners; and the only other miners in this county are Copper-miners and a few Lead-miners. Now in 1871 the enumerated male Tin-miners in Cornwall numbered 10,393, and the enumerated male Copper and Lead miners numbered 3,513, while in the same county there were 7,315 male miners of undefined minerals. Dividing these latter, who must have been either tin, copper, or lead miners, between these groups in the proportions of their enumerated numbers, we have a total of 15,860 Tin-miners in Cornwall in 1871; and, correcting this for the "retired" by a deduction of 2 per cent., we have a total of 15,543 in 1871, to compare with the total of 10,253 in 1881. It thus appears that the Tin miners in Cornwall decreased by 34 per cent. or thereabouts in the interval between the two Censuses. The amount of tin produced in the United Kingdom also fell off, according to the Board of Trade returns, by 21 per cent. in the same interval.

Metal workers.

From the Miners we pass on naturally to the Workers in Metal, including under this general term those who smelt the ore, as well as those who deal with the metals thus extracted. The number of these Metal-workers is difficult of estimation, in more than a rough fashion,—so intricate are their ramifications, and so mixed up are they in many cases with workers in non-metallic industries. Putting together, however, all those headings in the Occupation Tables that relate to workers and dealers in metals, or in products that consist mainly of metal, we have a total of 760,411 persons; or, without affecting an accuracy that is of course impossible, of some three-quarters of a million. Treating the Occupation Returns of 1871 in the same way, we find, after correction for the retired, that the workers and dealers in metal had increased in the intercensal decade by about 15 per cent., or in a slightly higher ratio than the general population.

The Workers in metal might be divided into those who extract the metal from the ore, that is, the smelters, dressers, and the like; those who work the metal into comparatively coarse and simple forms, such as plates, rails, girders, or articles for rough usage; and those who construct articles of greater delicacy or complexity, such as machinery, tools, and watches. But, unfortunately, the excessively vague way in which a large proportion of the Metal-workers returned their occupation rendered this, and indeed any tabulation of them, very unsatisfactory. We found, for instance, that it was quite impossible to separate the Tin-smelters from the Tin-plate workers, or these from the Tinmen or Tinkers; the Copper-smelters from the Coppersmiths, and so on. We were obliged, therefore, to abandon these and many other distinctions which we had proposed to retain, and to lump all the Tin-workers together, as also the Copper-workers; and although in the case of Iron-workers we were able to separate a few well-marked industries, such as Nail-making and Anchor and Chain making, yet the great bulk of the Iron industries had to be thrown together under a single heading.

The makers of machines, tools, and metallic articles of greater delicacy, in which the form given by the workman vastly outweighs the material in importance, as a rule return their occupations in a clearer and more definite manner than the comparatively undifferentiated makers of coarser goods; and consequently of this higher class of metal workers we have been able to give better account. Putting these aside, we must deal with the others in a very summary manner.

The Workers and Dealers in Iron and Steel numbered 361,343; and only exceeded the corrected total in 1871 by some three per cent. Among them were 18,741 Nail-makers, and 5,029 Anchor and Chain makers. The Anchor and Chain makers remained much the same in number as in 1871; but the Nailmakers had fallen off by 18 per cent., probably owing to the increased use of wire and other foreign-made nails.

Iron and Steel manufactures.

The Workers and Dealers in Copper numbered 7,348, and exceeded the corrected total in 1871 by 30 per cent. The Workers and Dealers in Tin numbered 36,923, and had increased by over 40 per cent. The Workers and Dealers in Zinc numbered 2,265, and had increased by 34 per cent. Finally, the Workers and Dealers in Lead, 2,460 in number, had fallen off by 27 per cent.

Copper, Tin, Zinc, Lead manufactures.

Among the Workers and Dealers in Mixed or Unspecified Metals, the largest group is that of the Brass Workers, with whom may be grouped the Bronze Workers, and the Makers of Lamps, Candlesticks, and Chandeliers. These together amounted to 30,918, and exceeded the corrected total in 1871 by 36 per cent. The persons engaged in the White Metal, Electro-Plate, and Plated Ware manufactures, together with the Pewterers, numbered 5,629, and had increased very greatly, the uncorrected total returned under these headings in 1871 having been only 3,407. The Makers of Bolts, Nuts, Rivets, Screws, and Staples numbered 8,017, and had also increased very greatly, the uncorrected total in 1871 having been 5,726. The Burnishers and Lacquerers, who differ from most of the Metal-workers in being chiefly of the female sex, numbered 2,687, and had increased nearly 30 per cent. In the case of all these groups of Metal-workers, excepting the Iron-workers, the numbers are comparatively small, so that very small differences in the accuracy of the returns, or in the methods of tabulation, would seriously affect the comparison of the figures for the two Censuses. Still the rate of apparent increase or decrease is so great in each case that, when every allowance is made for possible inaccuracies, we may still feel assured that the changes agreed, if not in actual amount yet in direction, with those indicated.

Workers and dealers in Mixed or Unspecified Metals.

8. Unoccupied Class.

There remain for brief consideration those persons who were returned without any specified occupation, constituting what we have styled the Unoccupied class.

UNOCCUPIED CLASS.

In 1871 the class called the "Indefinite and Non-productive Class" comprised not only persons without specified occupations, but also the considerable body of persons whose occupations were described in the schedules in general or vague terms, such as General Labourer, Artisan, Apprentice, &c., or in terms the meaning of which was unknown. These latter we have removed to the Industrial class, and our *Unoccupied class comprises and is confined to all those persons who were returned by rank, property, &c., and not by occupation, including all children under five years of age.

The Class comprised 14,786,875 persons, or 57 per cent. of the entire population, the females in it being to the males in the proportion of rather more than two to one.

It included, in the first place, 8,936,851 children and young persons under 15 years of age, most of whom were simply unoccupied in the sense that they were as yet preparing for the various businesses of later life. Secondly, it included 532,441 others, who were 15 but under 20 years of age, and of whom also a large proportion were preparing for active life. Thirdly, it included 676,393 persons who were 65 years of age or more, and of whom a large number had been engaged in business, but had retired. Excluding these three classes of persons there remained 4,641,190 who were 20 but not yet 65 years of age, that is to say, who were in the working prime of life, and yet were without specified occupation. Of these, however, 4,458,908 were women; of whom by far the greater part were married and engaged in the management of domestic life, and who can only be called unoccupied, when that term is used in the limited sense that it bears in the Census Returns. Many more of these women, though unmarried, were also engaged in domestic duties, or were assisting their fathers or other near relatives in the details of business.

Of the 182,282 males in the working period of life (20-65) without specific occupation, a large number, doubtless, were busily engaged in avocations which were none the less serious or less important because not recognized in our classification. They were managing their estates and property; directing charitable institutions; prosecuting literary or scientific researches; or engaged in other of the multifarious channels by which unpaid energy finds vent. If these were deducted from the 182,282 unoccupied males, and a further deduction were also made for those who were incapacitated for work by physical defects, the remainder, constituting the really idle portion of the community, would probably prove to be but very small.

VII. BIRTHPLACES OF THE POPULATION.*

1. The General Composition of the Population.

The following short summary shows the constituent parts of which the population of England and Wales, at the date of the Census, was made up; and also shows the proportions in which these several constituents contributed to the total.

2. Natives of England and Wales.

It appears from the Reports of the Registrar-General that in every county of England and Wales, without exception, the births registered in the 10 years preceding the Census outnumbered the deaths; so that in every county, had there been no migration and no emigration, the population would have been greater in 1881 than at the previous enumeration. The rates of increase would, indeed, have been widely different. In those counties where the population contained a high proportion of married women of reproductive ages the increase would have been great; in such counties, for instance, as Staffordshire, Glamorganshire, and Durham, the growth due to this “natural increment” would have been over 20 per cent. Those counties, on the other hand, where the proportion of wives of reproductive ages was low would have shown but little increase; such, for instance, were Cornwall, Devonshire, and Herefordshire, among English counties, and Anglesey, Carnarvonshire, Pembrokeshire, and Cardiganshire, among Welsh counties, in none of which would the rate of growth have exceeded 11 per cent. Nevertheless, as before said, in every county without exception there would have been some, and a not inconsiderable, increase.

As a matter of fact, we know that this was not the case. There were no fewer than 13 counties in which the population was found, on enumeration, to have diminished. These counties had not only lost all their natural increment, but something over and above this. There were 26 other counties in which the population had, it is true, increased, but in a lower ratio than would have been the case had there been no migration and no emigration. The actual increment in each of these counties was smaller than the natural increment. These 39 counties, therefore, had produced more men and women than they were able to retain, and had given off their surplus to other parts. Labour may be said to be one of their staple commodities, which they export to other counties or abroad.

* The tables relating to Birth-places are in Vol. III., which has an index at p. 526. Besides the tables relating to Foreigners (for which see foot-note to p. 56), the Summary Tables 7 and 8 give the country and county of birth of the population of England and Wales; while, in each Divisional Part, Table 11 gives the birth-places of the population of each county and large Urban Sanitary District, and Table 12 gives the distribution over the country of the natives of each county.

There remain 11 counties, or 12, if we call London, with the extra-metropolitan parts of Middlesex and Surrey, a county, in which the actual growth as shown on enumeration was in excess of the natural growth. These counties which absorbed population from without were London, Sussex, Essex, Leicestershire, Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire, Cheshire, Lancashire, Yorkshire, Durham, Glamorganshire, and Carnarvonshire. Counties that absorb population from without.

A glance at the table in which the rates of increase, natural and actual, are given for each county, and a comparison with the columns in the same table that give the general character of the prevalent occupations, will show that, disregarding a few exceptions, the counties which export surplus population to other parts of the country are agricultural, while the counties that absorb population over and above their own native product are, as the list already given sufficiently indicates, mining, manufacturing, or commercial. The centres of industry, therefore, are fed with labour at the expense of the agricultural districts (see Appendix A., Table 32).

Notwithstanding, however, the very great disturbance produced in the natural distribution of the population by this constant migration from agricultural to industrial districts, or, speaking generally, from country to town, the native population shows, after all, stationary habits of a very decided character. Of the natives of England and Wales who were in the country at the time of the Census, no less than 75·19 per cent. were enumerated in their native counties. In 1871 the proportion of stationary natives, as we may call them, was 74·04 per cent., or nearly the same; so that it appears that the increased facilities of locomotion, and the extended knowledge among the working classes as to the conditions of life in parts outside their immediate localities, have not had the result that might have been anticipated, of leading to greater migration. Comparing the two sexes in this respect, it appears that women are on the whole rather more migratory than men, probably in consequence of the demand in towns for domestic servants from the country. At any rate, the proportion of stationary males was 75·9, and that of stationary females 74·5 per cent. of the enumerated of the corresponding sex (see Appendix A., Table 30). Amount of migration.

There were, as might be supposed, very great differences between different counties, in regard to the retention of their natives within their borders (see Appendix A., Table 32). In Lancashire more than 90 per cent. of the enumerated natives of the county were enumerated within the county itself; and in Yorkshire, Glamorganshire, Durham, and Carnarvonshire, severally, as well as in London, this was the case with over 80 per cent. These, it will be remembered, are among the counties that absorbed population from without; so that it appears that those industrial counties which attract immigrants from other parts also retain, as might be anticipated, a large proportion of their own natives. The counties, on the other hand, that retain the smallest proportions of their natives are the agricultural, as is shown by the following list of the counties in which the stationary proportion of the enumerated natives was less than 65 per cent. Differences between counties as to migration.

In what parts of the country did the natives of these counties, who migrated, and who formed from 35 to 50 per cent. of the whole, find a home?

It appears from the tables (Vol. III., Table 12 of each Divisional Part) which show the geographical distribution within the country of the enumerated natives of each county, that some 47 per cent., or nearly a half, of the migrants from these counties of greatest migration had gone but a very small distance from their birth-place, having simply moved into the adjoining county, into parishes therefore which were often as near to them as parishes in their own native county. Excluding these persons, who can scarcely be said to have left their native districts, there remain from 19 to 26 per cent. of the natives of these counties who had really left their place of birth, and had migrated into more distant parts. Of these the only general statement that can be made is that, as before stated, they had migrated into the industrial centres; the migration from one agricultural county into another of the same character, unless adjoining, being very limited in amount. Those, however, who are interested in the matter, and who wish to study the laws of migration in greater detail, will find materials for so doing in the tables already mentioned, which give the geographical distribution of the enumerated natives* of each county in England and Wales.

Besides those tables, which have been now given for the first time, there are also others, as in previous Census Reports, which may be said to be the inverse of those already mentioned. Those gave the distribution of the natives of each county; these (Vol. III., Table 11 of each Divisional Part) give the birth-places of the inhabitants of each county. As those tables served to measure the migration out of any given county, so these serve to measure the migration into it from without.

The two sets of tables show a considerable amount of parallelism. Those counties which are shown by the one to retain a large proportion of their natives are shown by the other to attract a large number of strangers from without; and those counties which retain but a small proportion of their natives, are shown to receive but few immigrants from other parts; the same causes which drive out their own natives preventing strangers from coming in. As a general rule, it will be found that the counties with the highest native element in their population are the agricultural, and that those with the lowest are the industrial and the metropolitan.

3. Natives of Scotland and Ireland.

The Scotch
in England
and Wales.

The natives of Scotland who were enumerated in England and Wales numbered 253,528, being in the proportion of 9·8 to 1,000 of the entire population. The number of natives of Scotland enumerated in their own country was 3,397,759, so that there was one Scotchman or Scotchwoman in England or Wales to 13·4 in Scotland.

The number of Scotch natives in this country in 1841 was only 103,768, but it increased progressively at each succeeding Census up to 1881. The number, moreover, increased more rapidly than did the population of England and Wales; so that there was a progressive rise in the proportion which the Scotch element bore to the general population. In 1841 this proportion was 6·5 per 1,000, and rose till in 1881 it was 9·8 per 1,000 (see Appendix A., Tables 26 and 27). The counties in which the Scotch element was highest were Northumberland, where it constituted 54 per 1,000 of the population; Cumberland, where it was 49; Durham, where it was 28; Westmorland and Lancashire, in each of which it was 16; Middlesex, where it was 13; and Cheshire, where it was 12, per 1,000 of the population. In no other county was the proportion so high as 10 to 1,000 (see Appendix A., Table 29).

Of the great towns those in which the natives of Scotland were most fully represented were, as might be expected from their proximity, the industrial towns on the Tyne and Wear. Thus, in Newcastle-upon-Tyne over six per cent. of the population were Scotch, and in South Shields, Gateshead, and Sunderland, from four to five per cent.; whereas in Liverpool and Birkenhead, which came next in order, the proportion was barely four per cent. Then followed Manchester, Salford, West Ham, London, Kingston-upon-Hull, Portsmouth, Southampton, and St. Helens, these towns exhausting the list of those in which the Scotch formed as much as one per cent. of the inhabitants.

If we examine the distribution of the natives of Scotland in this country by another plan, namely, by the proportion which such natives enumerated in each county bore to the total number of Scotch natives in the whole country, we find that of 1,000 Scotch persons enumerated in England and Wales 243 were enumerated in London with the extra-metropolitan parts of Middlesex, Surrey, and Kent, 220 in Lancashire, 97 in Durham, 92 in Northumberland, 76 in Yorkshire, 48 in Cumberland, 31 in Cheshire, and 23 in Hampshire, while in no other county was the proportion as high

* It must be carefully noted that the term in the text is "enumerated natives," that is to say, natives who were present in England and Wales at the time of the Census. Of the natives who had emigrated, in contradistinction to those who migrated within the country, we have no means of giving account.

as 20. Passing to the great towns, of 1,000 natives of Scotland enumerated in England and Wales 204 were enumerated in London or the closely adjoining town of West Ham, 94 in Liverpool or Birkenhead, 35 in Manchester or Salford, 46 in Newcastle-upon-Tyne or Gateshead, 19 in Sunderland, 12 in South Shields, and 10 in Leeds, while in no other of the great towns was the proportion as high as 10 out of the 1,000.

The natives of Ireland who were present in England and Wales at the date of the Census numbered 562,374, being in the proportion of 21·65 to 1,000 of the entire population. The natives of Ireland enumerated in their own country were, as shown in the Irish Census Report, 5,062,287; so that there were in England and Wales one ninth part as many Irishmen as in Ireland itself.

The Irish
and Wales.

The number of Irish living in England and Wales in 1851 was 519,959, and in 1861 it had risen to 601,634; but at each Census since that date it was found to have fallen off. In 1871 it had fallen to 566,540, and in 1881, as already stated, to 562,374. It must be remembered, however, that the population of Ireland has itself declined very considerably. If this decline be taken into account it will be found that the Irish in England and Wales, when measured by their proportion to the Irish in their own country, have increased at each successive Census. In 1841 there were 36 Irish in this country to 1,000 in Ireland itself; in 1851 there were 80; in 1861 there were 105; in 1871 there were 107; and finally in 1881 the proportion had risen to 111 (see Appendix A., Tables 26 and 27).

The distribution of the Irish over the country was most unequal. In the purely agricultural counties their numbers were insignificant, while in the great manufacturing and mining counties they formed a not inconsiderable fraction of the population. Thus in Lancashire they formed 6·1 per cent., in Cumberland 5·6 per cent., in Durham 4·2 per cent., and in Cheshire 3·7 per cent. of the population; the proportion being also over 2 per cent. in Middlesex, Monmouthshire, Northumberland, and Glamorganshire. The proportion they bore to the population was lowest in the counties of Cardigan, Radnor, Norfolk, Huntingdon, Merioneth, Suffolk, Cambridge, Buckingham, Carmarthen, and Wilts; in no one of which was it as high as 0·3 per cent (see Appendix A., Table 29).

Passing from counties to towns, we find that in Liverpool the Irish formed 12·8, in Birkenhead 8·8, in St. Helens 8·5, in Manchester 7·5, and in Salford 7·4 per cent. of the population, these Lancashire and Cheshire towns being those in which the Irish element was strongest. Then followed in order Middlesbrough, Stockport, Cardiff, Gateshead, Preston, Bolton, Bradford, Bury, Blackburn, and Oldham, exhausting the list of great towns in which the Irish formed as much as 4 per cent. of the inhabitants. Of the aggregate inhabitants of London and of the 46 great towns each having a population exceeding 50,000 persons, 3·3 per cent. were natives of Ireland, while the proportion was only 1·5 per cent. in the rest of England and Wales.

Instead of considering, as we have hitherto done, the proportion borne by the natives of Ireland to the population of the several counties and towns, we may examine their local distribution in another way. Of each 1,000 natives of Ireland who were enumerated in this country, 378 were enumerated in Lancashire, 176 in London or the adjoining counties of Middlesex, Surrey, and Kent, 101 in Yorkshire, 65 in Durham, 42 in Cheshire, and over 20 in Cumberland, Staffordshire, Northumberland, Glamorganshire, and Hampshire respectively. With the exception of Hampshire, all these are mining or industrial counties, and the apparent exception presented by Hampshire is explicable by the comparatively large number of soldiers quartered in that county. Passing to the great towns, of 1,000 Irish enumerated in England and Wales 147 were enumerated in London or the adjoining town of West Ham, 139 in Liverpool or Birkenhead, 69 in Manchester or Salford, 17 in Leeds, 14 in Bradford, and 13 in Birmingham. In no other of the great towns was the proportion so high as 10 per 1,000.

If we compare the distribution of the natives of Scotland in this country with that of the natives of Ireland, we find, in the first place, that in both cases there is a very strong tendency to congregate in the industrial rather than in the agricultural parts, but that this tendency is somewhat less in the case of the Scotch than in the case of the Irish. Of 1,000 immigrant Scotch and 1,000 immigrant Irish, there were more Scotch than Irish in every one of the mainly agricultural counties, with the exceptions of Devonshire, Anglesey, Pembrokeshire, and Gloucestershire; each of which is either on the western coast, or at any rate more accessible from Ireland than from Scotland, through the ports of Plymouth, Holyhead, Milford, and Bristol. Secondly, we find that the distribution is considerably affected by the relative proximity to Ireland and Scotland respectively of the industrial centres. The Irish preferentially select Lancashire, Cheshire, Yorkshire, and the adjoining counties. The Scotch select the northern counties. The two areas overlap each other, doubtlessly, very considerably. Lancashire, Cheshire, Yorkshire, Northumberland, Cumberland, and Durham are easily accessible from either Scotland or Ireland. Still of these counties Lancashire and Cheshire are relatively more accessible from Ireland; and Northumberland, Cumberland, and Durham more accessible from Scotland. In correspondence with this, of 1,000 immigrants from each country, there were more Irish than Scotch in Lancashire and in Cheshire, and more Scotch than Irish in Northumberland, Cumberland, and Durham.

Of the other chief industrial counties, Glamorganshire, Monmouthshire, Staffordshire, and Warwickshire are proportionately more attractive to the Irish than to the Scotch; while, on the other hand, Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, and Essex, or in short London and its suburban environments, attract a larger proportion of the Scotch. Of 1,000 Scotchmen in this country, 261 were enumerated in these four counties, but only 185 out of 1,000 Irishmen.

NOTE.—This table may be read as follows :—Of 10,000 natives of Scotland enumerated in England and Wales, 5,180 were enumerated in the 47 great towns, viz., 1,954 in London, 30 in Croydon, and so on.

4. Natives of other parts of the British Empire.

The population of England and Wales included 29,316 persons who were born in the Islands in the British seas, that is to say, in the Isle of Man or in the Channel Islands. This group of immigrants was 14·3 per cent. in excess of the 25,655 natives of these Islands enumerated in England and Wales in 1871. This increase is the more noticeable, inasmuch as the aggregate population enumerated in the Islands themselves had declined in the course of the decade from 144,638 to 141,260, that is, by 2·3 per cent. In 1841 the numbers of natives of these Islands who were enumerated in England and Wales was only 11,705; but the number has risen at each successive Census since that date. In 1881 there was one native of these Islands in England and Wales to 3·8 such natives in the Islands themselves.

The county which had the largest share of these islanders was Lancashire, closely connected with the Isle of Man, where 9,082 were enumerated, an additional 1,232 being in Cheshire. In Hampshire there were 2,122, and in Devonshire 1,336. In London, which is not only a port, but the centre of attraction to all immigrants, there were 5,397.

The natives of India and of other Dependencies and Colonies numbered 94,399. This element in our population has also increased with each successive Census, and in part, doubtlessly, because the Colonies and Dependencies have themselves increased in population and in extent. The increase, however, has been greater than can thus be explained. In 1841 the number returned was 17,248; in 1851 it rose to 33,688; in 1861 to 51,572; in 1871 to 70,812; and, finally in 1881, as before stated, to 94,399; the increase in the final decade being 33·3 per cent.

To the foregoing may be added 4,628 persons born at sea, who were slightly more numerous than in 1871, when they numbered 4,395.

Casting up all the constituent parts of the population that have now been severally dealt with, we have a total of 25,800,067* persons who were either born in the United

* Persons born at sea are here reckoned as of British birth; but, as a matter of fact, a small proportion of them were Foreign subjects.

Kingdom or in some part of the British Empire, and this total formed 99·329 per cent. of the entire population of England and Wales, so that the foreign element was numerically insignificant.

5. *Natives of Foreign States.

Persons born abroad.

The natives of Foreign States enumerated in England and Wales amounted altogether to 174,372, and constituted 0·671 per cent. of the aggregate population. This foreign element, as indeed each other constituent part of the population, with the single exception of the Irish, has increased uninterruptedly with each successive Census. The increase in the last intercensal period was 25 per cent., or much higher than the increase of the whole population. The same was the case in each preceding intercensal period; from which it would appear that this country presents ever-increasing attractions to foreigners. In 1841 there was one foreign-born person to 403 population; in 1851 one to 291; in 1861 one to 197; in 1871 one to 163; and finally in 1881 one to 149.

Foreigners by nationality as well as birth.

Of the 174,372 natives of Foreign States, 56,373 were British subjects, being either the children of British parents, born while their parents were sojourning abroad, or foreigners who had been naturalised. The remaining 117,999 were not only born abroad, but were Foreign subjects. This is the strictly foreign element in the population; and this element also, as the total of the foreign-born, has increased with each successive Census in somewhat higher proportion than the population itself. In 1851 there was one such foreign subject to 356 persons enumerated; in 1861 there was one to 239; in 1871 one to 226; and in 1881 one to 220; the increase in the last intercensal period having been 17·3 per cent.

Distribution of foreign subjects.

These foreign subjects, being mostly in this country for business purposes, were, as might be anticipated, almost exclusively enumerated in the towns. Fifty-one per cent. of the entire number, or more than a half, were enumerated in London, and 39 per cent. more in some or other of the 46 great provincial towns. The towns which, after London, contained the largest number of them were Liverpool, Manchester, Kingston-upon-Hull, Leeds, Birmingham, and Cardiff.

Natives of Europe, Asia, Africa, and America.

Of the 117,999 persons who were foreigners by nationality as well as by birth, 98,617 were born in Europe, 484 in Asia, 258 in Africa, 18,496 in America, and 144 in unstated countries. In addition to these there were 32 foreign subjects who were born at sea. The number of natives of Europe had increased since 1871 by 9·8 per cent.; those of Asia by 34·4 per cent.; and those of America by 85·5 per cent.; while the natives of Africa had fallen from 385 to 258. Of the Americans, the great bulk, namely 17,767, were natives of the United States, showing a great increase since 1871, when only 8,270 were enumerated. This contingent, however, of 17,767 persons, borrowed from the United States, is of course as nothing compared with the contribution made by this country to the population of those States; for no fewer than 745,928 persons of English or Welsh birth were enumerated in the United States in 1880.

Natives of European States.

The foreigners of European birth, enumerated in England and Wales, amounted in all to 98,617, the number in 1871 having been 89,829. This element in our population had, therefore, increased by nearly 10 per cent. A considerable proportion of these foreigners were sailors in our ports; and as the remainder consisted mainly not of permanent settlers but of persons sojourning temporarily with us for purposes of business, the proportion of males to females among them was naturally very great, there being 183 of the former to 100 of the latter.

The local distribution of these foreigners was governed by the same fact; for though there was no single county, either in England or in Wales, in which there were positively no European foreigners at all, yet the great bulk of them was found exclusively in the industrial centres. About 60 per cent. of the whole were enumerated in London and its immediate neighbourhood, 12 per cent. in Lancashire with the adjoining parts of Cheshire, nearly 7 per cent. in Yorkshire, and about 2 per cent. in Durham, Northumberland, and Glamorganshire, respectively. The details, however, of this distribution, both for all European foreigners collectively, and for the natives of each individual country, are given elsewhere. (Vol. III., Summary Table 11.)

Germans.

Of all the foreign European States by far the most fully represented in England and Wales was the German Empire, which contributed 37,301 persons to our population against 32,823 enumerated in 1871, showing an increase of 13·6 per cent.

* The following are the chief tables relating to Foreigners: Vol. III., Summary Tables 9, 10, 11, as also Table 13 in each Divisional Part, relate to their numbers and distribution; Summary Table 12 relates to their ages; and Summary Table 13 to their occupations. Spaniards.

The Spaniards in the country numbered 1,433, against 1,484 in 1871; there was, therefore, a decrease of 3·4 per cent. in the decade. Of these 1,433 no fewer than 576 were Seamen, while of the remainder, 20 were Teachers, 54 Servants, 77 Merchants or Brokers, and 70 Commercial Clerks or Travellers.

Greeks, Turks, Portuguese, Roumanians, Servians.

The numbers of the natives of other European States were inconsiderable. There were 695 Greeks, including 255 Seamen and 112 Merchants and Brokers, with 45 Commercial Clerks and Travellers. There were 599 Turks, of whom 56 were Seamen and 158 Merchants or Brokers, with 37 Commercial Clerks and Travellers. There were 292 Portuguese, including 56 Seamen; and finally there were 91 Roumanians and 4 natives of Servia.

6. Population of London.

The population of London is so gigantic, and forms by itself so large a part of the entire population of the whole country, that it may be well to give a separate account of it. The tables we have already referred to will allow any one to make a similar analysis of the population of each county, and of each urban sanitary district having a population of as much as 50,000; excepting that in the case of these districts he will not be able to separate the natives of the district itself from the natives of the county in which it is situated.

The first column of figures gives the proportion of the population of London that was contributed by each county or other area. The second column of figures shows what proportion these several contributions bore to the total number of natives of such county or area enumerated in England and Wales. For instance, we learn that of the inhabitants of London 629 per 1,000 were London-born; and that of 1,000 London-born persons in the whole country 804 were living at the date of the Census in London itself. The English counties that contributed the largest proportion of immigrants to the population were, in the first place, the extra-metropolitan parts of Middlesex, Kent, and Surrey, which contributed between them 67 per 1,000; Essex, which gave 24; Devonshire, which gave 15; and Norfolk and Suffolk, which gave 14 and 13 per 1,000 respectively. The English counties that furnished the smallest contingents to the London population were Cumberland, Rutlandshire, and Westmorland.

The amounts of these contingents depended, of course, in great measure on the relative sizes of the counties. Cumberland, Rutlandshire, and Westmorland contributed few immigrants to London, partly because they were of small dimensions; and Devonshire contributed many, because of its own large size and population. But in the second column of figures the differences due to this cause are excluded, the figures indicating the proportion of the enumerated natives of each area that was resident in London. It becomes at once apparent that a most important factor in determining these proportions is proximity, and that the attraction of London is felt most strongly in the parts nearest to it. The counties that would head the list, were they arranged in the order of their pro rata contributions, would be Middlesex (extra-metropolitan), Surrey (extra-metropolitan), Essex, Hertfordshire, Berkshire, Kent (extra-metropolitan), and Buckinghamshire, being the counties closest at hand; while at the other end of the list would come, speaking generally, the counties that were farthest away. Doubtless there is also another factor, the effect of which is visible in the table, but is comparatively of little importance. The pro rata contributions of Cheshire and of Lancashire were only 10 per 1,000; of Yorkshire and of Durham only 12; of Derbyshire and of Staffordshire only 13. This was not merely because those counties were far off, for there were counties quite as far off that made larger, though still small, contributions. An additional cause was that the counties mentioned had attractions of their own; they were centres of industry, and retained a more than average proportion of their natives at home.

Neither Scotland nor Ireland contributed in any very material degree to the population of London; the natives of the former country constituting only 13 and of the latter country 21 per 1,000 of the inhabitants. These proportions were vastly exceeded in many of the great provincial towns. The subjects of Foreign States present in London were somewhat more numerous than the Scotch, but less numerous than the Irish, and formed about 16 per 1,000 of the entire population. Measured, however, by the proportions they bore to the total number of foreigners in the entire country, they were much more numerous than either the Scotch or the Irish; for, while of 1,000 Scotch and 1,000 Irish enumerated in England and Wales 195 and 144 respectively were enumerated in London, of 1,000 enumerated foreign subjects no less than 510 were found in the capital.

VIII.—INFIRMITIES.*

1. The Blind.

The total number of persons returned as afflicted by blindness was 22,832, being in the proportion of 879 to a million of the population, or one blind person in every 1,138. The proportion of the blind to the population has decreased with each successive enumeration since 1851, in which year account of them was taken for the first time; but the decrease in the decade ending in 1881 was much greater than in either of the preceding decennial intervals.

YEAR.	Number of Blind.	Blind per Million Persons enumerated.	Persons enumerated to one Blind Person.
1851 -	18,306	1,021	979
1861 -	19,352	964	1,037
1871	21,590	951	1,052
1881 - -	22,832	879	1,138

This decrease may be fairly attributed to the progressive improvement in the surgical treatment of affections of the eyes, and to the diminished prevalence among children of such diseases as small-pox, to which a not inconsiderable amount of blindness was formerly due. The extent of the decrease may be stated in the following form. Had blindness been as common an affliction in 1881 as it was in 1851, there would have been 26,523 blind persons in the country instead of 22,832, or 16·2 per cent. more than there actually were.

Of the blind, 12,048 were males and 10,784 were females, being in the proportion of 953 males and 809 females per million living of each sex. Thus one in every 1,049 males was blind, but only one out of every 1,237 females. In each of the four censuses in which account of the blind has been taken, the affliction has been found to be much more common among males than among females. This is what might have been anticipated, considering the differences between the two sexes in regard to their occupations, their exposure to accidents, and their liability to disease. This natural anticipation is, moreover, confirmed by the statistics of most other countries concerning which we have the necessary data. It is curious, therefore, to note that in Ireland the contrary was found to be the case, both in 1881 and in previous enumerations; and, further, that in this respect Ireland agrees with Finland and the Scandinavian countries in the north of Europe, and differs from the southern parts of Europe. This is shown in the following table:—

NOTE.—The proportions in this table for foreign countries are taken from “Die Verbreitung der Blindheit, &c. in Bayern.” By Dr. G. Mayr, 1877, p. 100.

The proportion of the blind to the population of the same time of life in England and Wales increases rapidly in the successive age-periods, as is shown in the following table; and at each age-period, excepting the last, the male proportion is considerably higher than the female. That the female rate is exceptionally higher than the male in the last age-period, 65 years and upwards, is to be explained, at any rate in part, by there being many more extremely old persons, say of 85 years and upwards, among the females than among the males. The apparent irregularity in the series of rates would probably disappear were it possible to subdivide this age-period into smaller sub-periods.*

Among the 22,832 blind persons enumerated were 1,958 who, according to the returns (see Vol. III., Summary Table 14), had been “blind from birth.” This term, however, must be interpreted as including not only those who literally answered such description, but those also who had lost their sight at a very early period of life; for it appears to be an excessively rare thing for an infant to be actually blind at the time of birth. It has been thought well to give a separate account,

The bli from bi

* The mode in which the facts were abstracted in 1871 enables us to break up the age-period, 65 and upwards, into two sub-periods, 65 to 85, and 85 and upwards. The male blind-rate was 6,812 in the earlier sub-period, while the female rate was only 6,687. But in the later sub-period, 85 and upwards, the female rate was 25,810, and far above the male rate, which was 21,450. It would, therefore, appear that in very advanced life women are more likely than males to become blind.

(see Vol. III., Summary Table 18), of these persons who either never saw or lost their sight before their education began, because it is a matter of some interest to know what occupations are open to persons thus heavily weighted in the race of life. Here and there a person thus afflicted, compensating the want of vision by increased attention to the indications of the other senses, learns to follow occupations that at first seem incompatible with his or her condition. One such man, for instance, was returned as ostler in an inn, and another as engaged in sea fishing.* But, putting such exceptional cases aside, the occupations open to those who have been blind from infancy are very few. Among such of these blind as were 15 years of age and upwards, only 51 per cent. of the males and 19 per cent. of the females were returned as following any definite occupation, whereas out of the whole population of England and Wales of the corresponding age the proportion occupied was 94 per cent. for males and 37 per cent. for females. Of the 436 with definite occupations, 110 were musicians, including seven piano-tuners; basket-making gave employment to 95, brush and broom making to 25, mat-making to 23, and chair-caning to 14; the knitting of stockings or other hosiery occupied 44 persons, all women; 19 were agricultural or general labourers, and 18 were street hawkers, leaving only 88 engaged in all other specified occupations.

The table (Vol. III., Summary Table 17) which gives the occupations of the blind generally, irrespectively that is of the age at which the blindness occurred, shows a great variety of employments. This table, however, is not of much practical value, for the returns on which it is based did not allow of any separation between occupations carried on by blind persons and occupations followed by such persons previously to their loss of sight.

2. The Deaf and Dumb.

The term "deaf and dumb" is used in the census returns in its popular meaning, that is to say, as comprising not only such persons as are absolutely without hearing and without speech, but also those persons who, though they might be vaguely conscious of loud noises made close to their ears, have yet from their birth, or from early childhood, been so deficient in the sense of hearing as to be unable to acquire articulate speech in the ordinary way. The returns, moreover, doubtlessly include a considerable intermixture of persons who had at first sufficient hearing to acquire speech, but who became deaf before they had firm hold on the faculty of articulation, and in consequence lost it completely. Possibly also there may be a few persons in the returns who, though completely deaf from infancy or childhood, have yet been taught to articulate by the modern method of instruction.

The directions given to the clerks employed in the abstraction were to include all persons returned as "deaf and dumb" or as "dumb" only, and also those returned as "deaf" who were inmates of deaf and dumb institutions. All other persons returned only as "deaf" were to be omitted.

There is no reason to suppose that the returns of the deaf and dumb were vitiated, as were those of idiots and imbeciles, by distinctly wilful omissions. But there can be no doubt that here also many excusable omissions were made in the first age-period, that is among children under five years of age. Parents are often not aware of the deafness of their infants; and, even when an impartial observer would have no doubt as to the fact, the parent not unnaturally hopes on against hope, and will not publicly acknowledge as a fact what he as yet refuses to accept as a certainty even to himself.

There are two modes of meeting this deficiency in the returns: either we might ignore altogether the first age-period, and confine ourselves to the statistics relating to persons over that age, a method which, though it would not serve for estimating the absolute numbers of deaf and dumb, would of course be sufficient, if adopted universally, for purposes of comparison between different countries or different parts of a country; or secondly, we might suppose that the proportion of deaf-mutes under five to all children of that age was the same as the proportion in the next age-period, 5 and under 15 years, in which the returns are probably fairly correct. This would enable us to estimate approximately the absolute number of deaf-mutes in the country, but requires us to admit, what is probably not the case, that deaf-mute children are as likely to live as other children, and also ignores the fact that some few children become deaf, and in consequence dumb, after their fifth year.* Still these two defects in the proposed method of estimation operate in different directions, and tend to neutralise each other; so that probably the method will give us a tolerable approximation to the actual facts. We shall, therefore, adopt this method.

The total number of deaf-mutes enumerated was 13,295; of whom only 498 were under five years of age, being in the proportion of 141 per million children at that age, whereas the proportion in the next age-period, 5 and under 15 years, was 590 per million. Correcting the numbers in the first age-period, so as to get this same proportion, we have 2,077 probable deaf-mutes under five years of age, and a total of 14,874 at all ages.

This is in the proportion of 573 deaf-mutes per million persons enumerated, or one in 1,746 persons. The proportion in 1871, after similar correction for the first age-period, was 572 deaf-mutes per million persons enumerated, or one in 1,748.

It appears, therefore, that the proportion of the population suffering from deaf-mutism remained practically unaltered in the interval between the two last censuses. It by no means necessarily follows from this, that no improvement took place in regard to the infirmity in question in the course of the decade. Though at first it looks like a paradox, yet it is plainly true that an increased proportion of deaf-mutes to the total population might really betoken an improvement; for it might be due merely to increased longevity among the deaf-mutes as compared with the rest of the population. If to such supposed increased longevity there were also superadded a diminished production of fresh deaf-mutes, a double improvement would have been effected, and yet the rate might remain practically unaltered. Fewer deaf-mutes would have been added to the register at the one end, but fewer would have disappeared from it at the other. Now, an examination of the deaf-mute rates at successive age-periods leads to a belief that something of this kind actually occurred. Indeed the figures in the following table seem inexplicable on any other hypothesis:—

In each of the three censuses preceding that of 1881 the proportion of deaf-mutes per million population of the same age diminished gradually in the successive age-periods, the first age-period (0 and under 5 years) being disregarded for reasons already explained. This gradual diminution in the rate was, of course, a plain and indisputable proof that the condition of deaf-mutism was unfavourable to vitality; for, had it not been so, the proportion of deaf-mutes to the population would have remained constant or without decrease throughout. But the figures for the census of 1881 give a perfectly different result. Here there is no gradual decrease in the proportion of deaf-mutes with advancing age. The proportions fluctuate somewhat irregularly; but it is distinctly observable, in the first place, that the proportions have considerably increased, as compared with 1871, in the three later age-periods, a fact which can only be accounted for by increased survival of former deaf-mutes; and, in the second place, that the proportions have considerably diminished in the earlier age-periods, a fact which can only be explained by diminished introduction of fresh deaf-mutes during the last and penultimate decades.

* Not many, however. Inquiries instituted in 1840 and 1858 in Bavaria, into the age at which deaf-mutism occurred in 5,403 cases concerning which the necessary data were to be had, gave the following results per 1,000 cases:—

The result of this double alteration has been that the unfavourable influence of deaf-mutism in regard to longevity, which was so conspicuous in the previous returns, has been completely masked.

Deaf-mutism
to sex.

Of the corrected number of deaf-mutes in 1881, 8,043 were males and 6,831 were females, being in the proportion of one in 1,572 males and one in 1,952 females. Out of equal numbers living of each sex there would, therefore, be 124 male to 100 female deaf-mutes.* This is in accordance with the fact, which will again present itself when we come to speak of idiocy, that congenital defects are, as a rule, much more common among males than among females, as also very probably are those infantile diseases which tend to destroy the auditory apparatus.

Geographical
distribution
of deaf-
mutism.

As regards the distribution of deaf-mutism over the surface of the country, we have followed the same plan as will be described more fully when we come to deal with the statistics of idiocy, our object being to avoid the interference in the distribution caused by the presence in some parts of special asylums or institutions. With this view we have taken birth-place, and not the place of habitation, as our basis, and have calculated the proportion of deaf-mutes to the enumerated natives of each county. The proportions cannot be calculated with perfect accuracy, inasmuch as in nearly six per cent. of the cases the place of birth was not given. Moreover, as already pointed out, the returns of deaf and dumb in the earlier years of life are utterly untrustworthy. The figures, therefore, which we shall give will only represent the comparative, and not in any way the absolute, amounts of deaf-mutism among the natives of the several counties. The counties are arranged in order of prevalence of deaf-mutism; and the table may be read as follows: the same number of natives which in England and Wales gave 1,000 deaf-mutes gave in Anglesey 1,378, in Merionethshire 1,317, and so on.

* In the United States of America, according to the recent census returns, there were 117 male to 100 female deaf-mutes out of equal numbers of each sex.

The totals on which this table is based, that is the actual number of deaf-mutes born in the individual counties, are very small, much smaller than the totals on which the corresponding table of idiocy is based, and consequently much irregularity must be expected in the results. This much, however, seems to be tolerably plain, that deaf-mutism is much more common among the natives of the mountainous parts of England and Wales than elsewhere; for, though the county of Montgomery is at the bottom of the list, yet in the ten counties at the top are no fewer than six Welsh counties, and also Westmorland. In this respect deaf-mutism goes hand in hand with idiocy and imbecility, for these affections, as will be seen hereafter, are also disproportionately prevalent in the mountainous parts. The marked contrast, however, which is observable in the case of idiocy between the purely agricultural and the manufacturing or mining counties is not apparent in the case of deaf-mutism. It may possibly be that, were the data more abundant, this want of correspondence might disappear. But it must also be remembered that some 37* per cent. of the deaf-mutes owe their condition not to congenital deficiency, but to such diseases as scarlet fever and the like, and that these diseases are much more prevalent as a rule in the crowded industrial centres than in purely agricultural parts.

There are, of course, some occupations from which deaf-mutes are necessarily debarred by their infirmity. These, however, are but few, and most occupations can be pursued by them, though doubtlessly with some disadvantage as compared with those competitors who can hear and speak. The female deaf-mutes at any rate find apparently no great difficulty in getting employment; for 40 per cent. of those of them who were 15 years of age and upwards were returned as having some special occupation, whereas this was the case with only 37 per cent. of the general female population of the corresponding ages.† The male deaf-mutes, on the other hand, seem to be at a not inconsiderable disadvantage, for only 76 per cent. of those of them who had finished their fifteenth year were engaged in definite occupations, against 94 per cent. in the corresponding general male population.

The occupations for which deaf-mutes show preference, or which they find most suitable to their condition, are naturally such as can be followed by individuals independently and do not require frequent communication with fellow workers. Agricultural or general labour, shoemaking, and tailoring are the chief occupations of the men; while dressmaking and sewing, domestic service and charring, washing, and, in Lancashire, work in cotton mills, form the main occupations of the women. The following is a brief abstract of the chief occupations of these deaf-mutes:—

† The figures given above might seem to imply that female deaf-mutes find employment more readily than males not so afflicted. But probably the explanation is that a much smaller proportion of the deaf-mutes is married than of women generally; so that there is a larger proportion of these dependent for support on their own labour.

3.—The Insane.

Persons of unsound mind are variously returned in the schedules as lunatic, idiot, and imbecile.

No accurate line of demarcation can be drawn between the several conditions indicated by these terms. Speaking generally, however, the term idiot is applied in popular usage simply to those who suffer from congenital mental deficiency, and the term imbecile to persons who have fallen in later life into a state of chronic dementia. But it is certain that neither this nor any other definite distinction between the terms was rigorously observed in the schedules, and consequently no attempt has been made by us to separate imbeciles from idiots. The term lunatic also is used with some vagueness, and probably some persons suffering from congenital idiocy, and many more suffering from dementia, were returned under this name. Still, as a rule, the term lunatic is not used to include persons suffering from such affections, but is limited to those afflicted by more acute forms of mental disease. We have, therefore, separated the lunatics from the idiots and imbeciles; the division being desirable for practical purposes hereafter to be mentioned. Some term, however, was required by us which should stand for all kinds of mental unsoundness, and for convenience we have taken the term insanity to include them all.

The total number of persons returned as suffering from some or other form of insanity was 84,503, being in the proportion of 3,253 per million of the whole population, or one person of unsound mind in every 307.

In 1871 the proportion was 3,034 per million, or one insane person in every 329. Thus a not inconsiderable increase in the proportion of persons admitted to be insane occurred in the interval between the censuses of 1871 and 1881. Whether this apparent increase of insanity was a real increase, or whether it was explicable, as was thought to be the case with the similar apparent increase in the preceding intercensal period, 1861–71, by diminished unwillingness on the part of persons to admit the existence of insanity in their families, is a question to which answer must be sought outside the census returns. It may be noted, however, that the increase in the amount of admitted unsoundness of mind was entirely in the class returned as lunatics, that is as persons suffering from the comparatively acute forms of unsoundness, and not in the class returned as idiots or imbeciles, that is as persons suffering from congenital or chronic forms of unsoundness; and that it is in the case of these latter rather than of the former that concealment would be most possible; for the former, or lunatics, are mostly lodged in institutions, public or private, whose superintendents would have no motive for concealment, while of the idiots and imbeciles a much larger proportion remain at home with their families, and are included in the householders' schedules.

Of the 84,503 insane persons 39,789 were males and 44,714 were females, being in the proportions of 3,148 males and 3,353 females per million of the corresponding sex, or of one in every 318 males and one in every 298 females.*

In a certain sense, therefore, it is indisputably true that there is more insanity among females than among males, namely, in the sense that out of equal numbers living of each sex and at all ages there are more insane females living than insane males. But it must be clearly understood that this statement is by no means identical with another that is sometimes confounded with it, namely, that the proportion of females who are attacked by insanity is higher than the proportion of males similarly attacked. Not impossibly, nor improbably, the contrary is the case. It may very possibly be that mental disease attacks a larger proportion of males than of females, but that, owing to the enormously high death-rate of the male insane as compared with the female insane, the number of the latter living at any given moment comes to be greater than the number of the former. The male cases that occur are on this hypothesis more numerous, but are rapidly swept away by death, while the female cases, though fewer in number, live on and accumulate. This hypothesis squares with the figures in the following table; from which it appears that it is only in the last two age-periods, namely after 45 years of age, that the proportion of the female insane exceeds that of the male insane.

* In the United States of America the recent census gave proportions of 3,367 per million persons; 3,516 per million males, and 3,214 per million females.

According to the returns of the Lunacy Commissioners from 1872 to 1881 inclusively, the mean annual death-rate among the registered male insane was 11·94 per cent. of the average daily number on the register; while the death-rate of the females was only 8·13 per cent. The recovery rate of the males was 10·50 per cent., and that of the females 11·59 per cent. Thus the per-centage of the male cases of insanity that would annually disappear from the register, either by death or cure, or what for convenience we call shortly the discharge-rate, would be 22·44, while the per-centage of female cases that would disappear from the same causes would be only 19·72. Now, if we assume that these discharge-rates, which were true for such insane persons as were under the observation of the Lunacy Commissioners, were true for all insane persons, whether under observation or not, we can make a very simple calculation. There were at the date of the census, as we have seen, 3,148 male insane and 3,353 female insane persons per million living of each sex respectively. Of these, 706 males and 661 females would be discharged either by death or recovery in the course of the year ending on April 3rd, 1882. In order, therefore, to maintain the same proportionate numbers of insane in each sex (neglecting as insignificant the slight increase in the population during the year), there would have to be 706 new male cases of insanity per million males living, and 661 new female cases per million females living, or out of equal numbers living of each sex there would be 106·8 new male cases to 100 new female cases. These figures, therefore, may be taken as probably representing with approximate accuracy the comparative liability of the two sexes, irrespectively of age differences, to mental unsoundness.

Among the 84,503 persons enumerated as insane, that is either as lunatics or as idiots or imbeciles, 461 were stated to be dumb, and 355 were stated to be blind; while 17 others were both dumb and blind (see Vol. III., Summary Table 15).

Combin
of insa with o
afflict

It has already been stated that though, speaking generally, neither idiots nor imbeciles are included among the persons returned as lunatics, yet the distinction has not been universally observed, and that a certain intermixture of congenital idiots, especially at the earlier age-periods, and a considerable intermixture of imbeciles, especially at the later age-periods, has almost certainly occurred. We may, however, take the group of lunatics, as a whole, to represent all other forms of insanity than idiocy or imbecility.

Lunati

The total number of persons returned as lunatics was 51,786, or 1,994 per million of the population. The females were 28,102, and far in excess of the males, who only numbered 23,684. This excess, moreover, was not only absolute but relative; for there were 2,107 lunatic females and only 1,874 lunatic males per million living of the corresponding sex.

It has already been explained that a difference in the proportions of existing cases in the two sexes does not necessarily imply a corresponding difference in the proportions of occurring cases. It may be, and very possibly is, the case, that the difference would disappear, or be inverted, if the discharge-rates for the two sexes were taken into account. Unfortunately, we have not got the discharge-rates for lunatics as distinguished from the insane of all kinds. If, however, we assume the discharge-rates for the former to be the same as those for the latter, namely, 22·44 and 19·72 per cent. for males and females respectively, and make a similar calculation to that made in treating of the insane of all kinds, the result will be that the new male cases of lunacy exceed the new female cases, for equal numbers of each sex, in the proportion of 101·2 to 100.

It is only in the later periods of life, from the 45th year upwards, that the female lunatics are, proportionately to the numbers living, in excess of the males. There is one exception to this statement, for in the age-period 15 and under 20 years, the female rate of lunacy very slightly exceeds the male rate, there being 302 lunatic females and only 293 lunatic males per million living of similar age in each sex. This is also, as shown by the annual reports of the Registrar-General,* the age-period in which alone the female sex is equally disposed to suicide with the male sex; and again is an age-period in which the female death-rate exceptionally exceeds the male death-rate; and the explanation is doubtlessly in each case to be found in the critical changes that occur at this period of life in the female organisation.

Idiots and imbeciles.

It appears to be generally admitted that the system of dealing with the insane which has for some years past been adopted in London is the one which has most to recommend it, not only from a medical, but also from an economical point of view. By that system the idiots and imbeciles, or, in brief, the harmless insane, are kept apart from persons afflicted by more acute forms of insanity, and are dealt with by special methods and in special institutions, these harmless persons being themselves still further subdivided according to their ages. Although, therefore, no exact line of demarcation can be drawn between these two classes of the insane, we have nevertheless thought it expedient to give a separate account of those persons who have been returned as idiots or as imbeciles, so that possibly those concerned in the matter may be able to form some kind of estimate of the numbers with which they would have to deal should the system become general.

The total number of persons returned as idiots or imbeciles was 32,717, being in the proportion of one such person in every 794 of the population. The proportion in 1871 was one in 771, so that as regards this kind of mental unsoundness a diminution had apparently occurred in the course of the decade. As there is no reason to suppose that the returns made in 1881 as regards this kind of insanity were less truthful than those made on the previous occasion, it is fair to conclude that the apparent was also a real diminution.

But though the figures may be used for such purposes of comparison, it would be most unsafe to accept them as representing with even approximative accuracy the actual amount of idiocy or imbecility existing in the country. There can be no doubt whatsoever that the returns made by persons as to the mental capacity of their children or other relatives are far from trustworthy. In the earliest years of life this imperfection in the returns is unavoidable. It cannot be expected, for instance, that a mother will return her child, as yet only two or three years old, as an idiot, however much in her own heart she may believe or fear this to be the case; for to acknowledge it as such would be to abandon all hope. But when the child has reached such an age that no doubt as to its mental incapacity can any longer be entertained, concealment of the fact by omitting all mention of it in the schedule is no longer equally excusable; and yet it is certain that such omission is excessively common. We have taken much trouble to ascertain, so far as possible, to what extent the returns are vitiated by such suppressio veri.

Attempt to form a corrected estimate.

With this object we obtained from the managers of a large idiot asylum the addresses of the families of all those idiots who had been admitted into the institution in the year commencing with the day of the census. We then examined the schedules given in by these families, and found that in exactly half the cases of such of these indisputable idiots as were 5 but under 15 years of age, no mention whatsoever was made in the schedule as to the existence of any mental incapacity. We have no reason to suppose that the cases admitted into this institution were in any respect of exceptional character, or drawn from classes in which there would be any exceptional inclination to concealment; and consequently we are compelled to accept the conclusion that half the cases of undoubted idiocy or imbecility of children residing with their families, and from 5 to 15 years of age, altogether escape enumeration; and we cannot but suppose that the proportion of omissions would be still greater if it were possible to take into account not only such kinds of idiocy as render the sufferers fit for admission into an asylum, but idiocy of every degree. As regards idiots 15 years of age and upwards, the number of cases which we were able to investigate after a similar fashion was too small to furnish a basis for estimating the probable omissions; but, so far as we could judge from the obtainable data, the omissions are not very numerous, and we shall therefore assume that the returns of idiots and imbeciles 15 years of age and upwards are sufficiently correct, and that the omissions only affect the returns under that age. Now, the total number of idiots and imbeciles enumerated as 5 but under 15 years of age was 4,870; but of these 1,361 were in asylums or institutions, where all idiots would be correctly returned. There remain 3,509 who were with relatives or friends, and this number must at least be doubled, as explained above. This gives us a total of 8,379 idiots, of 5 and under 15 years of age, being in the proportion of 1,409 to a million living at such ages. But the proportion of enumerated idiots in the next age-period, 15 and under 20 years, was 1,536 per million living at those ages, and it is impossible to admit that the proportion could be less in the earlier age-period than in the later; for at these ages the cases of idiocy are almost exclusively cases of congenital idiocy, or, at any rate, of idiocy beginning soon after birth, and consequently the proportion of living idiots to a million of the same ages cannot possibly increase with successive age-periods, unless it be true that idiot children live longer than sound children, which is, of course, not the case. It appears, therefore, that the correction made by us for omissions was insufficient, and the insufficiency finds its explanation in the fact already noted, that only idiots of such character as to be selected for admission into asylums were taken into account.

We must, therefore, make another correction, and this may be best done, though the correction will still be inadequate, by supposing that the proportion of idiots among children of 5 but under 15 years of age was the same as the proportion among young persons who were 15 but under 20. In all probability it was considerably higher, as idiot children are likely to die earlier than sane children; but at any rate we shall be within the mark if we only assume equality. This method gives us 9,136 idiots, of 5 but under 15 years of age, and, being equally applicable to idiots at the still earlier age-period, gives us 5,408 idiots under five years of age. Thus the total number of idiots and imbeciles at all ages may be estimated at 41,940, instead of 32,717, as enumerated, and this estimated total is doubtlessly still too low; for not only have we supposed that idiot children are as likely to live as other children, and that there were no omissions in the returns of idiots who were 15 and under 20 years of age, neither of which suppositions is likely to be true, but we have also necessarily taken no account of the great probability that some omissions are likely to have been made at the still later age-periods, owing to the want of any clear distinction between imbecile and lunatic, many harmless insane adults being returned under this latter designation.

Persons returned as idiots or as imbeciles form two very distinct classes, which, however, the returns give us no means of accurately separating from each other. There are, firstly, those persons who, owing to defects either congenital or dating from early infancy, have never been of sound mind; and, secondly, there are those who have only become demented at a later period. As this latter form of imbecility rarely occurs in the earlier part of life, we may assume that the figures in our table for the first three age-periods, and perhaps for the fourth, relate mainly, if not exclusively, to cases of congenital or infantile idiocy; and, proceeding then to compare the figures for the two sexes with each other, we see that such congenital defect is, as are most congenital deficiencies, much more common among males than among females; for out of equal numbers living of each sex under 25 years of age, there were 133 male idiots enumerated to 100 female idiots.

idiocy more common
than females

The distribution of idiots and imbeciles over the country is of course largely affected by the presence or absence of special institutions for their treatment or relief, and consequently very erroneous conclusions might possibly be drawn from the table which gives the proportion of such persons in each county to its total population. Although, therefore, we have given such a table (Vol. III., Summary Table 16) in accordance with previous usage, we have also attempted to construct another, which it appeared to us would be of more value, in which the birth-places are taken as the basis, and it is shown how many idiots and imbeciles there were to a million enumerated natives of each county. If, as there seems no reason to doubt, the omissions in the returns of the idiots and imbeciles were proportionately the same in all parts of the country, then this table would of course give us a strictly accurate account, not of the absolute, but of the proportionate, numbers of idiots and imbeciles among the natives of the several counties.

Geographical
distribution
of idiocy
and imbecility

Unfortunately a difficulty presented itself which interfered with the satisfactory completion of this comparative table. We found that in the case of 12·7 per cent. of the enumerated idiots and imbeciles the place of birth was not stated, and this kind of omission was by no means equally common in all parts of the country, so that it could not be disregarded, like the other kind of omission, as affecting only the absolute and not the proportionate results. We were obliged, therefore, somewhat to modify our plan. So far as possible, that is in 87·3 per cent. of the cases, we took the birth-places, as stated in the schedules, for our basis; in the remaining 12·7 per cent. we made an assumption. The inmates of any county asylum with unstated birth-places were assumed to have been natives of that county, and a similar assumption was made in the case of workhouses and other purely local institutions. The inmates of the great asylums at Caterham and Leavesden were similarly assumed to have been born in London (though this was probably not true of a considerable proportion of them), and were distributed by us to the three metropolitan counties in the proportions in which the natives of such counties contributed to the population of London. When an institution received patients indifferently from all parts of the kingdom, those inmates whose birth-places were not stated were left out of account.

These assumptions can scarcely have interfered in any material degree with the accuracy of the table, except, indeed, as presently to be pointed out, in the case of the metropolitan counties. The results were very curious, as will be seen in the following table, in which the counties are ranged in the order of frequency of idiocy and imbecility among their natives. The figures attached to each county do not represent the actual number of idiots per million natives, a number which, as has been shown, it was impossible to give with any accuracy, but represent the proportional amount of native idiocy in the several counties as compared with each other or with the entire country. It may be read as follows: the same number of natives which in the case of the whole of England and Wales gave 1,000 idiots or imbeciles gave in the case of Herefordshire 1,437, in the case of Cardiganshire 1,351, and so on.

The one great fact that stands out conspicuously in this table is the much greater comparative amount of idiocy and imbecility that exists among the natives of agricultural counties, and especially of such agricultural counties as are also mountainous, than among the natives of manufacturing and mining counties.

The former, as a rule, have proportional rates above the mean of the whole country; the latter, as a rule, have proportional rates below the average. There are some few apparent exceptions to this general statement. Thus there are one or two purely agricultural counties with low rates; but these are mostly very small counties, such as Huntingdonshire, Rutlandshire, and Brecknockshire, where the data on which the calculation is founded are so scanty as to furnish a very insecure basis. On the other hand, Middlesex, in spite of its mainly urban character, shows a rate considerably above the average; and it may be noted as tending to confirm the probability of a high rate of idiocy for this county, that it shows also an excessively high proportion in the table of deaf-mutism (cf., p. 64). There is, however, reason to suppose that the rate assigned to Middlesex in the idiocy table is unfairly high; for somewhat more than a fourth of the idiots and imbeciles whose birth-places were unknown were patients in the Caterham and Leavesden asylums, and all these were considered to be natives of London, and were distributed to the several metropolitan counties in accordance with the rule laid down by us and mentioned above. It is probable that many of these persons should have been assigned to other counties, in which case the proportion for Middlesex (and in a lesser degree those for Surrey and Kent) would have been lower than in the table. At any rate, the unfortunate deficiency of information as to the birth-places of the inmates of the Caterham and Leavesden Asylums makes the calculation as to the proportionate amounts of idiocy much less trustworthy in the case of the metropolitan counties than in that of the other counties. Another exception to the general rule is presented by Warwickshire, which county, notwithstanding its industrial character, shows a rate of idiocy far above the average of the country.

Disregarding, however, these apparent exceptions, the general rule is unmistakable: agricultural districts produce numerous idiots and imbeciles, industrial districts produce few. What may be the explanation of this marked contrast we can but conjecture. It may be that the industrial centres attract from the rural districts those who are comparatively strong in mind and body; and that the children born to these stronger parents are less liable to congenital deficiencies than the offspring of the comparatively feeble parents, mentally and physically, who are left behind; and it may also be that the varied interests and quickened mental activities which accompany the industrial life of urban communities maintain the brain in a healthier condition than does the comparatively monotonous existence of an agricultural labourer, so that fewer adults become demented in the towns than in the country. These, however, are questions of which the discussion hardly falls within our province.

Thus much as to the several infirmities, mental and physical, concerning which we were directed by the terms of the Census Act to make inquiry. We have given much time and space to their discussion; for we felt bound to point out, as clearly as we could, how very incomplete are the returns which relate to these afflictions, and more especially those which relate to idiocy and imbecility. We have done the best we could with these unsatisfactory data. We cannot, however, but express our decided opinion that statements made by persons as to the deficiencies, mental or bodily, of their children or other relatives are not worth the cost and labour of collection and tabulation. In the recent census in the United States of America the returns made by householders as to idiocy and lunacy were supplemented by a system of special inquiries by specially paid enumerators, and by correspondence with nearly 100,000 medical men.* It is possible that, with such an elaborate and costly machinery, returns might be obtained of fairly approximate accuracy; but without it the returns will never, in our judgment, be of much value.

4. Sickness and other Infirmities.

The English Census did not embrace any inquiry as to the amount of other forms of sickness or infirmity existing in England and Wales. It may be noted, however, that 24,087 patients were enumerated in the General and Special Hospitals (see Vol. II., Summary Table III). The patients enumerated in Hospitals were 7,619 in 1851; 10,414 in 1861; and 19,585 in 1871. The proportion of these hospital inmates, to 100,000 of the enumerated population of England and Wales, was 42 in 1851; 52 in 1861; 86 in 1871; and 93 in 1881. It is scarcely necessary to point out that the proportion of patients in hospitals to the general population is a measure rather of the relative amount of hospital accommodation, at these four Censuses, than of the relative amount of sickness prevailing in the country. It is an undoubted fact that in recent years the amount of hospital accommodation has increased at a greater rate than the population, mainly through the erection of a large number of Cottage Hospitals, and of Hospitals for Infectious Diseases. The number of Hospitals included in the list of Public Institutions, published in the Registrar-General's Annual Report for 1871, was but 346, whereas it had increased to 691 in the Report for 1881.

Workhouses. In addition, however, to the patients in Hospitals, a very considerable proportion of the sick are constantly under treatment in the Workhouse Infirmaries, which are the legal hospitals for paupers. We have, however, no means of ascertaining what proportion of in-door pauperism was due to sickness. The special or pauper inmates of Workhouses (including Workhouse Infirmaries, the Metropolitan Asylum Hospitals, and Pauper Schools) were 179,620 in 1881, against 120,978 in 1851; 125,722 in 1861; and 148,291 in 1871. The proportion of in-door paupers, to 100,000 of the population, was 676 in 1851; 627 in 1861; 652 in 1871; and rose to 692 in 1881. This increase in the number and proportion of in-door paupers was undoubtedly due, in great measure, to the action of Boards of Guardians in applying the "house-test."

Prisons and Reformatories. From the bodily and mental infirmities which fill the Asylums for the Blind, the Deaf and Dumb, the Imbecile, and the Lunatic, and the Hospitals for the Sick, and that also supply the Workhouses with a large proportion of their inmates, it is no difficult transition to the moral infirmities which provide the inmates of Prisons. Recent anthropometrical investigations, moreover, clearly prove that the criminal classes suffer from distinct physical deficiencies. The number of prisoners enumerated in 1881 was 27,889, and was equal to 107 per 100,000 of the entire population. It is satisfactory to find that the proportion of prisoners has shown a steady decline since 1851. It was 132 in 1851; 130 in 1861; 127 in 1871; and, as above stated, further declined to 107 in 1881. In addition, however, to the inmates of Prisons, 16,856 boys and girls were enumerated in certified Reformatories and Industrial Schools; whereas the number so returned in 1871 did not exceed 10,598. This large increase in the number of young persons under detention in these Institutions was probably attributable in great measure to the increase of accommodation for such detention resulting from the operation of the Education Act of 1870, and the necessity for dealing with incorrigible truants and street waifs.

The decrease in the number of adult prisoners may, to some extent, be reasonably attributed to the remedial effect, upon the juvenile criminal classes, of the detention and individual training received in Reformatories and Industrial Schools.

IX.—THE UNITED KINGDOM.*

1. Population of the United Kingdom.

So far we have dealt exclusively with the results of the Census in England and Wales, that is to say, in that portion of the United Kingdom in which alone the enumeration was carried out and the results tabulated under our immediate superintendence.† Having now concluded our report on those results, our proper task is finished. It will probably, however, be convenient that we should go somewhat beyond our strict province, and give a summary view of the numerical results of the Census as carried out in the United Kingdom as a whole, and still further as carried out in the entire British Empire.

The population of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland amounted to 34,884,848 persons; and if, in accordance with the usage of previous Censuses, we take into account the Islands in the British Seas, and also the natives of the United Kingdom who were serving abroad at the date of the Census in the Army, the Navy, and the Merchant Service, we have a total of 35,241,482 persons. This was 3,396,103 in excess of the population in 1871, the increase being equivalent to an average daily addition of 929 persons to the community throughout the decade, the similar daily increase in the preceding decade having been 692.

The decennial rate of increase was no less than 10·7 per cent., which was considerably higher than the rate of increase in any of the three preceding decades, in which it had been successively 2·5, 5·7 and 8·6 per cent.

This gradual rise of the rate of increase was due in the main, though not entirely, to the fact that the decrease of the population of Ireland, which in 1841–51 was at the rate of 19·8 per cent., has become less and less in each succeeding decennium. The decrease in this division of the Kingdom was, as already stated, no less than 19·8 per cent. in 1841–51; it fell in the next decade to 11·8 per cent.; in the next to 6·7 per cent.; and finally in the decade ending with the Census of 1881 to 4·4 per cent. The population of Ireland decreased in the whole interval between 1841 and 1881 by 3,021,761 persons, or 36·9 per cent. The decrease in the final decade was of 237,541 persons, or at the rate of 4·4 per cent.

To this loss of population in Ireland must be further added a loss of 2,894 persons in the population of the Channel Islands, which fell off 3·2 per cent. in the decade 1871–81, having previously remained almost stationary since 1851; before which date it had increased much more rapidly than the population of the rest of the United Kingdom.

The population of the Isle of Man also showed a slight decline. In 1871 it numbered 54,042 persons; but in 1881 the number had fallen to 53,558.

The increase, therefore, in the aggregate population of the United Kingdom and the Islands in the British Seas was entirely confined to Great Britain, that is to say, to England, Wales, and Scotland. In England and Wales the rate of increase was 14·4 per cent., and in Scotland 11·1 per cent.; and in each case the rate of increase was higher than it had been in any of the three preceding decades. The gains and losses in the respective sub-divisions were as follows:—

—		Increase.	Decrease.
England and Wales	-	3,262,173	—
Scotland	-	375,555	—
Ireland	-	—	237,541
Channel Islands	-	—	2,894

Total	-	3,637,728	241,625
Total increase = 3,396,103.

* For tables relating to the United Kingdom, and to natives of the United Kingdom who were abroad at the date of the Census, see Appendix A., Tables 33–46.

† The enumeration in the Isle of Man and in the Channel Islands was carried out under the directions of the authorities of those Islands. The results were tabulated under our superintendence, but were kept distinct from those of the English and Welsh Census, and published as a separate volume.

2. Natives of the United Kingdom abroad at the time of the Census.

Of the 34,884,848 persons forming the population of the United Kingdom (excluding the Islands in the British Seas, and the Army, Navy, and Merchant Seamen, abroad) 34,535,095 were born within its limits; while 349,753 were born abroad, namely, 145,863 in British Colonies or Dependencies, and 203,890 in Foreign States.

Against these 349,753 persons born out of the country who were in the United Kingdom at the time of the Census, must be put the natives of the United Kingdom who at that date were living abroad. The returns of these were necessarily somewhat imperfect. From those countries in which regular Censuses are taken accurate accounts were received by us. But the Consular or other returns from countries in which no such systematic enumerations are made could of course be only approximative estimates. As, however, the great bulk of our fellow countrymen abroad were in countries where regular Censuses are taken, the possible errors from mistaken estimates in other parts may be neglected as practically insignificant when merged in the grand total. There were, then, according to the returns received by us, 3,959,899 * natives of the United Kingdom living out of the country at the date of the Census. These, with the 34,535,095 who were enumerated in the country itself, make up a total of 38,494,994 persons born in the United Kingdom, and alive on April 4, 1881.

Of the 3,959,899 natives of the United Kingdom who were abroad, 89,798 were in India, and 988,934 were in some other of our colonies or dependencies, while the remaining 2,881,167 were in the dominions of foreign powers. Of these 2,881,167 persons, the great bulk, namely 2,772,169, were in the United States, and consisted of 745,978 natives of England and Wales, 170,136 natives of Scotland, and 1,854,571 natives of Ireland, while the precise nationality of the remaining 1,484 was not specified. The natives of England and Wales enumerated in the United States had increased in the interval between 1870 and 1880 by 19·3 per cent., and the natives of Scotland by 20·8 per cent., while, as might have been anticipated from the emigration returns, the natives of Ireland had slightly fallen off in number. As compared with the contingent furnished by the United Kingdom to the United States, the number of our fellow countrymen in any other foreign state, or in all other foreign states together, was quite insignificant. There were in all but 108,998 of these, of whom 36,447 were in France, 11,139 in the German Empire, 7,230 in Italy, and 5,007 in Russia, these four countries being those in which the British-born sojourners were most numerous.

X.—THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

The British Empire may be considered as consisting of three portions; firstly, the United Kingdom; secondly, British India and Ceylon; and, thirdly, all other British Possessions, Dependencies, and Colonies.

The population of the United Kingdom, as we have already seen, amounted in 1881 to 34,884,848 persons. The population of Ceylon and British India, exclusive of the Feudatory and Native States, was 206,837,886; while the inhabitants of the remaining Dependencies, Possessions, and Colonies, numbered 12,464,896. Thus the aggregate population of the whole Empire consisted of 254,187,630 persons, a total which would be increased to 304,005,549, and would fall very little short of the estimated population of the whole of Europe, were it thought proper to include in the British Empire the Feudatory and Native States of India with their 49,817,919 inhabitants (See Appendix A., Tables 47 and 48).

In 1871 the population of the British Empire, excluding these Indian States, was reckoned at 234,802,593† persons, so that the increase in the course of the decade 1871–81, whether by growth of former dependencies or by the addition of new dependencies, amounted to 19,385,037 persons, being in the ratio of 8·3 per cent.

* The natives of the United Kingdom serving in the Army, Navy, and Merchant Seamen abroad are included in this total.

† The figure given in the Census Report of 1871 was 234,762,593. To this, however, have to be added 40,000 as the mean estimated number of native Indians in British Columbia. See Census Report 1871, vol. iv. p. 162, foot-note.

The 19,385,037 persons who were added to the population were distributed as shown in the following Summary and Comparative Table :—

* Including the Islands in the British Seas.

† Aden and Perim are here included in order to facilitate comparison with the figures for 1871, when no separate return was made of the population of those places.

The territory occupied by the 254,187,630 inhabitants of the British Empire is estimated as consisting of slightly over eight millions of English square miles,—an area more than twice as large as Europe, larger than North America, almost half as large as Asia, and not very far short of one-sixth of the land surface of the earth. Of these eight millions of square miles, somewhat more than three and a half millions are in America, and form nearly a quarter of that continent; three millions more square miles are in Australasia; somewhat less than a million are in Asia; a quarter of a million are in Africa; while the portion that lies in Europe constitutes a very inconsiderable fraction of the whole, amounting to no more than 120,960 square miles, of which 120,537 form the United Kingdom.

We have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient Servants,

BRYDGES P. HENNIKER, Registrar General.

NOTE.—The Table has been deduced from the Estimated Population in the Middle of each Census Year. The Population for each year from 1801 to 1841 has been obtained from the probable increase deduced from the annual excess of Baptisms over Burials, and from the population enumerated at each Census. (See Census Report for 1851, Vol. I. p. xxix.) The population for each year from 1841 to 1861 is deduced from the ascertained rate of increase of males and females observed in the 20 years; and for the years 1861 to 1881 from the annual rate of increase prevailing in each of the last two Census decades.

TABLE 5.—ENGLAND and WALES.—STRENGTH of the ARMY, NAVY, MARINES, and MERCHANT SERVICE, abroad; the EXCESS of FEMALES over MALES at home and abroad, and over MALES at home; and the PROPORTION of FEMALES to every 1,000 MALES in ENGLAND and WALES, at each successive Census.

* The Army, Navy, and Seamen ashore were excluded from the population enumerated at the Censuses in 1801, 1811, 1821, and 1831; corrections have, however, been made for this fact in calculating the excess of females over males at home, and the proportion of females to males in the home population, at those Censuses.

TABLE 9.—ENGLAND AND WALES.—POPULATION of LONDON, and of each URBAN SANITARY DISTRICT of which the Population in 1881 exceeded 50,000 Persons, at each successive CENSUS.

NOTE.—In many cases in which the Urban Sanitary District as now constituted includes parts of parishes or townships, it has been impossible to ascertain the precise population enumerated within its present boundaries at each Census. In such cases the population within these parts of parishes at each Census has been approximately estimated. All the figures in the following Table which include any such estimated numbers are printed in italics.

NOTE.—It appears from the above table, derived from Returns furnished by the Board of Trade, that 2,228,396 Emigrants sailed from the Ports of the United Kingdom during the ten years 1871–80. But in order to judge more accurately of the extent to which Emigration has affected the Population, the following Table has been prepared, showing the number of Emigrants in the interval between the Censuses of 1871 and 1881. The Emigrants whose origin was not distinguished in the Returns have been distributed in the proportions of those whose birth-places were ascertained.

NUMBER and ORIGIN of EMIGRANTS from the UNITED KINGDOM between the CENSUSES of 1871 and 1881.

PERIODS.	TOTAL.	English.	Scotch.	Irish.	Foreigners.
Total -	2,244,338	996,038	170,757	530,924	546,619
1871 (April 1st to Dec. 31st) -	224,694	91,788	17,942	63,995	50,969
1872–80 -	1,975,961	886,208	149,472	458,813	481,468
1881 (to March 31st) -	43,683	18,042	3,343	8,116	14,182

It may be inferred from the official returns that the number of Emigrants from the United Kingdom was not less than—

717,913	in the interval of the Censuses	1881 and 1841 ;
1,692,063	ditto	ditto 1841 and 1851 ;
2,249,355	ditto	ditto 1851 and 1861 ;
1,976,577	ditto	ditto 1861 and 1871 ;
2,244,338	ditto	ditto 1871 and 1881.

The following is a comparison of the number of Emigrants of British and Foreign Extraction during each of the intervals between the last four Censuses :—

	Total.	English.	Scotch.	Irish.	Foreigners.

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appeared to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed; e.g., "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to "Schoolmaster"; a Member of Parliament or Peer engaged in any branch of commerce or industry has always been referred to the latter, not to "Peer, M.P., &c."

The numbers returned under any heading include Labourers, Apprentices, and Assistants, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Messengers, Errand boys, Porters, or Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings. Civil, Military, and Naval Clerks, Law, Bank, Insurance, and Railway Clerks, and Government and Railway Porters, are, however, exceptions to this rule. Many young persons, being Apprentices or Assistants, have, therefore, been referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows or orphans, carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will sometimes be found under occupations commonly followed by men only.

Persons returned as retired from any business have not been referred to that business. Inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed that they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their usual occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster," alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."

The minus sign prefixed to certain figures in the column headed Increase of Population denotes a decrease instead of an increase in the population not shown.
 The return of the population of the Island of Alderney was made in 1821. In the returns of 1851 and 1861 there was a considerable increase of population, attributed to the Government works then in progress. In 1871 there was a decrease, which was attributed to the discontinuance of such works.
 A larger military force in the Islands of Guernsey and Alderney in 1861 than in 1851.

NOTE.—Persons returned as engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to the one that appeared to be of most importance; or, if there was no difference in this respect, to the one first given by the person in his or her return. In some cases special rules have been followed; e.g., "Clergyman and Schoolmaster" in combination has always been referred to "Schoolmaster"; a Member of Parliament or Peer engaged in any branch of commerce or industry has always been referred to the latter, not to "Peer, M.P., &c."

The numbers returned under any heading include Labourers, Apprentices, and Assistants, as well as Masters, but not Clerks, Messengers, Errand boys, Porters, or Watchmen, for which occupations there are special headings. Civil, Military, and Naval Clerks, Law, Bank, Insurance, and Railway Clerks, and Government and Railway Porters, are, however, exceptions to this rule. Many young persons, being Apprentices or Assistants, have, therefore, been referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows or orphans, carrying on the business of their deceased husbands or fathers, will sometimes be found under occupations commonly followed by men only.

Persons returned as retired from any business have not been referred to that business. Inmates of workhouses have been referred to their trades, unless their age or infirmities showed that they were past work. But persons who might be supposed to be only temporarily separated from their usual employment, such as Prisoners, and Patients in General Hospitals, have been classed under their usual occupations.

In some cases, for convenience of space, the male designation, e.g., "Schoolmaster," alone is given, instead of "Schoolmaster, Schoolmistress."
